Managing Cases

An Evaluation of the Case Manager Program in Delaware's Superior Court

by Christine Brooks and Danilo Yanich

June 1999

Center for Community Development & Family Policy and School of Urban Affairs & Public Policy, University of Delaware
In 1996, Delaware's Superior Court received a grant from the U. S. Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) to increase the efficiency of the judiciary by hiring administrative support. The grant provided funding for five criminal case manager positions to assist with managing aspects of the criminal case process. The case managers were also to provide administrative and technical support to the three commissioners so that they (the commissioners) could assume additional courtroom work. In turn, assistance to the commissioners would increase the amount of time available for the judges. Through the provisions of this grant, Superior Court’s goal was to increase trial availability for the judges, thus increasing the capacity to dispose cases and reduce delay.

In order to examine the effectiveness of the case manager program, the Superior Court contacted the Center for Community Development & Family Policy and the School of Urban Affairs & Public Policy at the University of Delaware to conduct a "process" evaluation of the program. A "process" evaluation is a systematic examination of the goals and implementation of the program.
The primary purpose of this evaluation was to document the "lessons learned" in order to improve effectiveness within the court. Qualitative data was collected from the Court Administrator, Case Managers, Prothonotaries, Commissioners and Judges.

The data that we gathered did the following:

(1) documented the new approach that Superior Court has taken with the added administrative support;

(2) identified the "lessons learned".

The evaluation questions that guided this inquiry were:

► What were the perceived objectives of the program?

► How has the program been implemented?

► How did the program-as-implemented compare to the program intentions?

► What were the perceptions of different participants in the program of:
  (a) strengths?
  (b) weaknesses?
  (c) ways to improve in the future?
Superior Court of Delaware

Superior Court is Delaware's court of general jurisdiction. It has statewide original jurisdiction over criminal and civil cases, except equity cases and certain matters designated by statute over which the Court of Chancery has exclusive jurisdiction, and domestic relations matters which jurisdiction is vested with Family Court. The Court has exclusive jurisdiction over felonies and drug offenses, except those felonies and drug offenses involving minors. In civil cases the Court's authority to award damages is not subject to a monetary maximum.

The Court hears cases of personal injury, libel and slander, and contract claims. It also tries cases involving medical malpractice, legal malpractice, property cases involving mortgage foreclosures, mechanics liens, condemnations, appeals related to landlord-tenant disputes, and appeals from the Automobile Arbitration Board. Superior Court also has jurisdiction over involuntary commitments of the mentally ill to the Delaware State Hospital.

The Court serves as an intermediate appellate court, hearing appeals from the Court of Common Pleas, Family Court (adult criminal), and more than fifty administrative agencies, including the Industrial Zoning and Adjustment Boards, and other quasi-judicial bodies. Appeals from Municipal Court are heard as second trials in Superior Court. Appeals from Superior Court may be taken on the record before the Supreme Court (Administrative Office of the Courts).

The Court's Caseload

In FY '97, Superior Court of Delaware total number of new cases filed, 8,056 filings, exceeded the previous year's record high number for the fourth year in a row, 7,620 filings. Both criminal and civil filings increased during FY '97 over 7 per cent and the case numbers are still growing (Administrative Office of the Courts: Annual Report of the Delaware Judiciary, 1997).

The court administrator, TomRalston, stated that Superior Court manages its growing caseload through differentiated case management, alternative dispute resolution methods, and a "customer service" focus in order to serve the public in pursuit of justice. The court's strategic plan is based upon the Trial Court Performance Standards, which emphasize the needs of those who are served by the court, in addition to what the court itself should accomplish as an organization. One of the projects that exemplifies the court's "customer service" method of caseflow management is the case manager program.

The Court's Condition

In his own words, the Court Administrator describes the court's case processing activities before the case manager program was implemented and the circumstances to which it was to respond.

There were a number of factors which caused the court's workload to continue to increase. The court has moved from being a passive participant to an aggressive manager of its cases. The court has changed the way cases are processed, devising new approaches, tailored to the specific needs and characteristics of classes of cases.

The capacity of others to place demands on the court's time has increased. And the General Assembly continues to produce new requirements that apply to the processing of cases, without any recognition of the additional work imposed by those requirements. Each of these factors is why the court is expending more energy and resources than ever before to dispose each case.

Differentiated Case Management (DCM) is the practice of tailoring case management processes to the specific requirements of classes of cases. For example, murder cases are assigned to individual judges at the time of indictment. The assigned judge is responsible for all aspects of the case until disposition. Because of the complexities surrounding sexual assault cases, most are assigned to a judge who decides all pretrial issues. Increasing numbers of juveniles facing serious felony charges are being prosecuted as adults. A judge in each county has been assigned to manage the court's juvenile caseload. The responsibility of managing individual cases, or groups of cases, requires judicial time.

Other occasional proceedings or incidental duties have, as the caseload has grown over the years, developed into substantial administrative assignments. One judge in each county is responsible for the assignment of cases, where the public defender has a conflict of interest, to court-appointed contractual attorneys. Petitions for the return of property seized in connection with the prosecution of criminal charges have become a separate caseload. Assigning cases and deciding petitions takes judicial time.

As more defendants are sentenced to incarceration, and all felony cases which result in the longer sentences are sentenced by Superior Court, the number of motions for reduction of sentence, motions for post-conviction relief and other correspondence from inmates have increased astronomically. Deciding these motions and responding to prisoner letters takes judicial time.

Similarly, the number of offenders serving probation sentences has accumulated over the years so that there are more than 16,000 offenders under the supervision of the Division of Probation and Parole. This potential base from which violation of probation (VOP) charges may be filed continues to expand. As the number of offenders on probation increases, so does the number of them who are cited for failure to pay financial obligations such as restitution, fines and an increasing number of surcharges. It also increases the number of tax intercept appeal hearings for offenders whose tax refunds are confiscated to pay their court-ordered obligations. Reading probation reports, deciding VOP charges, and conducting VOP fast track hearings, contempt hearings for failure to pay, and tax intercept appeal hearings— they all take judicial time.

Over the years, the number of outstanding warrants and capiases has grown, increasing the number of capias and warrant returns and bail-setting/scheduling hearings, which are conducted. The increased number of defendants who fail to appear before the court results in more bail forfeiture hearings. These cases now require trials. Capias and warrant returns, scheduling hearings and bail and property forfeiture hearings take judicial time.

Another factor that affects workload is the increased capacity of criminal justice agencies to bring more work to the Court. The number of police officers, prosecutors, public defenders, members of the Bar have all increased over the years. Even if the number of new cases filed were constant, the number of issues to be addressed by judges continues to grow unabated. Therefore the criminal justice community's capacity for filing motions and taking cases to trial has grown. There are now three times more probation officers than judges, which places increasing demands on limited judicial time.

The evolution of these new caseloads, special assignments and other administrative duties have eroded the amount of time judges can be available for trial. The commissioners were intended to relieve the judges by taking on several of their duties, but now the commissioners are overloaded with duties without administrative support. These overloads have primarily centered around judicial and support staff time, and have resulted from focusing on cases post-disposition via status conferences.
(Interview with Tom Ralston, Court Administrator)

The case manager program was developed, funded by Bureau of Justice Assistance and implemented into Delaware’s Superior Court System in order to respond to court delay and to facilitate case processing.

Purpose of the Case Manager Program

The goal of the case manager program is to increase the effectiveness of the quasi-judicial staff (commissioners) of the court, to develop data management improvements to maintain the progress within the court system and to increase trial availability for the judges. These functions entail developing and implementing a comprehensive case management system which includes documents, calendars, and reports for identifying, evaluating, scheduling, tracking and disposing of all criminal cases and miscellaneous matters referred to the judge or commissioner. The case managers assign criminal cases to the appropriate case track and assist in the evaluation of specific cases for assignment to other available alternative treatment programs.
Further, the case managers, when necessary, coordinate the assignment of a court-appointed attorney and assist in the design and implementation of monitoring processes to track case progress. The case managers prepare statistical reports for the commissioner to analyze the processing of the criminal caseload.

The case manager provides support for and directs all courtroom trial activity for the commissioner or judge, investigates and clarifies case facts, organizes evidence and prepares charts/tables. In addition, the case manager develops recommendations for suppression hearings, restitution disputes and property forfeiture cases. The case manager also coordinates the collection of legal research from law clerks and interacts with all court system personnel and components related to criminal matters in order to proceed to trial in an efficient and expeditious manner.

Another purpose of the case manager program is to develop a team working relationship with the judge or commissioner as well as other clerical staff and various personnel in the Office of the Prothonotary to maintain open lines of communication. The case manager also maintains communication with personnel from all areas of Superior Court, attorney offices, prisons and other criminal justice related offices for purposes of providing relevant information on court events.

Each case filed has its own unique characteristics which necessitate individualized treatment. As a result, the case managers are also viewed as problem-solvers in criminal case processing, responsible for identifying problems that arise in the course of managing criminal proceedings from filing to disposition. The issues are then communicated to the judge, commissioner, or other court personnel in order to find a resolution to achieve the expeditious processing of cases.

The overarching purpose of the case manager program is to establish accountability in Superior Court’s case processing. These case managers are a new addition to the criminal division of Superior Court. In the past they functioned as clerks in the Office of the Prothonotary and performed data entry duties similar to an assembly line operation. One clerk would enter the case; another clerk would docket the case and hand it off to another clerk who would schedule the case. This process was tedious and time consuming and if a problem occurred during this process, no one was held accountable. With the creation of the case manager position, one person would manage the information and be held accountable for its accuracy.

Court Administrator Tom Ralston illustrates the point:

A piece of paper comes into the Prothonotary’s office, somebody clocks it in and then hands it off to somebody else and they docket it and then hand it off to someone else and they schedule it and hand it off etc. It was broken down into little pieces and each of those people doing those jobs were court clerks. Now what we are doing is one person needs to know more about a whole case from start to finish. This person needs to be able to do all of those steps because a lot of time is wasted in between the hand-offs and we are trying to move away from the assembly line mentality (to a system) where people feel a responsibility for these cases. It is not just a stack of paper that I have to move off of my desk tomorrow to someone else it is a case here and there is a person behind it. If you see something wrong we want it to come back to you.... We want to build that kind of accountability (Interview with Tom Ralston, Court Administrator).
Duties of the Case Managers

The primary objective of the case manager program is to increase the efficiency of the judiciary by providing administrative and technical support to three commissioners. These case managers have taken on several responsibilities normally conducted by judges. These activities entail:

1. All capias returns: Both courtroom and office duties, input information from the courtroom proceeding, clean the capias calendar and notify all criminal justice related offices of upcoming events (i.e. case scheduling, presentence office and judges chambers);

2. Preliminary hearing: Responsible for transferring paperwork from Court of Common Pleas to Superior Court and inputting the information into the system, make files and enters file into the criminal filing system;

3. Grand Jury/Indictments: Receives Grand Jury indictments, assigns arraignment dates and makes new files and files them away;

4. Arraignments: Case manager prepares files for the Commissioner by pulling the calendar and printing worksheets to take to court. In court the case manager then records information and prepares Bail Bonds/Commitments and releases if needed as well as enter the data into the system;

5. Violation of Probation Hearings/Sentencing: These events are handled by the Commissioner and the case manager attends these hearings. The case manager pulls the files from the calendar and records the information at the time of hearing and then enters information into the system. The case manager may also have to prepare commitments and releases;

6. Criminal Scheduling: The case manager has access to the Commissioner’s On-Time Calendar in which the case manager is responsible for entering all courtroom proceedings;

7. Other Criminal duties are reverse amenability hearings and misdemeanor pleas.

The criminal case managers are also assigned civil duties along with the Criminal duties. Such civil duties are:

- civil scheduling
petitions for return of property

non-dispositive civil motions

tax intercept hearings

involuntary commitment hearings

any other assigned duties by the Commissioner or Judges

This chapter described the goals and activities assigned to the criminal case managers as intended in the implementation design in September 1997. The succeeding chapters describe the evaluation and report the findings regarding the actual implementation plan and the perceptions of program participants as to how the program performed over the last two years.
The general method used for this project was survey research. The data collection method most useful for this type of evaluation was face-to-face structured interviewing. The respondents selected for interviews were identified by the Superior Court as those persons who had the most complete knowledge of the program. The persons interviewed (in early 1999) included:

New Castle County:
- Three case managers
- The Prothonotary
- One commissioner
- One judge; (total=6)

Kent County:
- The case manager
- The Deputy Prothonotary
- The Prothonotary
- The Commissioner
- One judge (total=5);

Sussex County:
- The case manager
- The Commissioner
- The Deputy Prothonotary
- The Prothonotary
- One judge (total=5).

The interview questions for purposes of qualitative inquiry were developed with input from the Court Administrator (See Appendix A for the complete interview guides that were applied to all respondents). The interviews were audio-taped to ensure accuracy. A sample of the interview questions included:

1. In general, what are the goals of the case manager program?

2. Did Superior Court, as an organization, provide you with the necessary means to carry out your activities? If yes, how? If not, how not?

3. Using the A, B, C, D & F grading system, how would you rate the performance of the case manager program regarding case processing, in general? Please indicate strengths and weaknesses.

4. What suggestions, if any, would you have for the Court to improve the case manager program?

Data Analysis Procedures

The first step in analyzing the data for the case manager program was transcribing the tapes and reviewing the verbatim responses to each interview question by each informant. This process allowed us to describe the responses. After reviewing the data, we analyzed the interviews by cross-interview analysis. Cross-interview analysis is a process of grouping together answers from different respondents to common questions and analyzing different perspectives on central issues.

We used a structured interview guide approach in which the answers from different people were grouped by questions from the guide. The interview guide actually constituted a descriptive analytical framework for analysis. The data were organized by the ten interview questions.

Matrix or logical analysis was used to search for patterns among the informants. This procedure involved creating potential categories by crossing one dimension or typology with another and then working back and forth between the data and one’s logical constructions. The idea was to move back and forth between interview questions and the actual data in a search for meaningful patterns and linkages. We found linkages that referred to goals, description of activities, resources available, rating performance, and ways for improvements. Once the patterns were identified, we drew preliminary conclusions and developed hypotheses about relationships.
The findings are organized by paralleling the research questions to the interview questions. There are seven sections that outline what we found with respect to the case manager program.

To reiterate, the research questions were:

1. What were the perceived objectives of the program?

2. How has the program been implemented?

3. How does the program-as-implemented compare to the program intentions?

4. What are the perceptions of different participants in the program of (a) strengths? (b) weaknesses? (c) ways to improve in the future?

Each research question is linked to the appropriate interview question(s) that provided the information for the issue. The interview and research questions are stated for each section.

Section 1: Match of Planned Goals and Objectives to Perceived Goals and Objectives

Research questions:
- What were the perceived objectives of the program?
How does the program-as-implemented compare to the program intentions?

Interview question:
In general, what are the goals of the case manager program?

The bullet points are the planned goals indicated in the federal grant and in the interview with the Court Administrator. The perceived goals as summarized are the comments made by respondents in each county.

Planned Goals & Objectives

- Increase the effectiveness of quasi-judicial staff (commissioner)
- To develop data management improvements to maintain caseflow progress
- Increase the efficiency of the judiciary by hiring five case managers who will provide administrative and technical support to three commissioners and one master who will take on several responsibilities currently conducted by judges.

Perceived Goals & Objectives

New Castle County:
- Assist judge or commissioner
- Research correct information
- Flow of cases in fast & efficient way
- Research in-depth information on cases
- Inform judge
- Cleanse the system
- Help court system & outsiders thorough system to prevent mistakes
- Get every case scheduled
- Troubleshooters
- Additional time to devote to a particular problem-issue
- Facilitating case management
- Help reduce delay on the criminal side

Kent County:
- Used for a specific judge or commissioner to help carry out their duties and advise them
✓ Help the court run smoother
✓ Have one person assigned to commissioner to research and problem solve for the commissioner
✓ To facilitate the case from start to finish
✓ Expedite the entire process
✓ Manage cases better in a more effective and efficient way
✓ Accomplish the objectives of the court
✓ Improve administration of justice

Sussex County:
✓ Given certain task to perform for commissioner and judge
✓ Help the judge’s secretaries to reduce their caseload
✓ Research for the judge
✓ Help the court to run better
✓ To help the prothonotaries
✓ Take some of the workload off of the judicial staff and the commissioner
✓ Data gathering
✓ Accountability
✓ Involved in implementing and planning
✓ Contribute to productivity
✓ One contact person move cases through quicker
✓ Make time more valuable

Summary: Planned Goals and Perceived Goals

When we compared the planned goals with the perceived goals, we found that, in general, they were relatively consistent. There was a difference, however, in the relationship of the case managers to the quasi-judicial and judicial staff. The planned goals articulated a role for the case managers as an assistant for the commissioners and the master. As each county carved its own niche for the case managers to fit the county’s individual needs, that role was expanded. In New Castle County the case managers provided administrative and technical support for both the commissioner and judge. In Kent County the case manager assisted the commissioner mainly. In Sussex County the case manager assisted the judge mainly.
Section 2: Match of Planned Activities to Reported Activities

Research questions:
❖ How has the program been implemented?
❖ How does the program-as-implemented compare to the program intentions?

Interview question:
❖ What activities do you conduct as a case manager?

The bulleted items are the federally funded job description that was specified by the Court Administration Office in September 1997.

Planned Duties (Job Description)
❖ All capias returns
❖ Preliminary hearing
❖ Grand Jury/Indictments
❖ Arraignments
❖ Violation of Probation hearings/sentencing
❖ Reverse Amenity hearing
❖ Misdemeanor pleas
❖ Criminal Scheduling
❖ Civil Scheduling
❖ Petitions for Return of Property
❖ Non-dispositive civil motions
❖ Tax intercept hearings
❖ Involuntary commitments hearings
❖ Any other assigned duties by the commissioner/judge

Reported Case Manager Activities

The activities that were reported for the case managers are listed below (Table 1). While there was some overlap of those activities across counties as reported by the respondents, there was also some variance with respect to the number of persons who mentioned the activity.

If the case manager stated a specific duty and he/she was the only one who mentioned it regardless of which county, the duty was listed as one of the merged activities. The case manager was the main individual who clearly knew what activities were conducted on a daily basis.

Comparison of the Planned Duties to Reported Duties

When comparing the planned duties to the merged activity table (Table 2), each county performed a job duty specified on the planned duty list to some extent. We found that Kent County had a compelling match to the planned duties over the other two counties. It appeared that the three counties assigned duties to the criminal case managers based on individual county needs and not so much following the exact intended duties specified by the federal grant. Kent County was the only county that did not deviate from the original duties specified for the federal grant.

Managing Cases: Evaluating the Case Manager Program

Supporting Activities

This component of section two examines research question: How has the program been implemented?

Interview question: What activities do you undertake as the prothonotary or commissioner or judge with regard to the case manager program?

The various activities performed by the prothonotaries, the commissioners and the judges supported two distinctive themes. The two emerging themes were "active role" and "passive role" that were carried out by the incumbents in these three positions.

Active Role: The prothonotaries assumed supervisory activities and were involved in the case manager’s daily activities. The responsibilities appeared to be consistent in all three counties. Such responsibilities were geared towards problem-solving, direct communication with the case managers and monitoring the workload to ensure that the case manager was accomplishing the specified duties. A representative quote from a prothonotary illustrates the "active" role theme.

"...as their supervisor I just make sure that the job is being done. If there is a problem I intervene and if I don’t think they are working, I tell them to get back to work." (Interview with prothonotary).

Passive Role: In general, the commissioners and judges took on a relatively passive role regarding the case managers. However, in Sussex County, the judge was actively involved with the duties of the case manager. But the concern is that the case manager initially was to be assigned to the commissioner and not the judge. According to the BJA grant’s statement of the purpose of the program, the commissioner was supposed to have active involvement with the case managers and function as the case manager’s supervisor. From the interviews, the commissioners in all three counties had consistent responses as to what their activities were with respect to the case manager program. They all stated details of in-court work and all indicated that they did not know much of what the case managers did outside of the courtroom. This could be perceived as a weakness for the program because the purpose of the program was to assist and provide administrative and technical support for the commissioners. Instead the case managers assisted and provided administrative support for either the judge, prothonotary or another judicial staff member. Our conclusion is that the commissioners were to have active involvement but instead took on a more passive role, and the judges were to undertake a passive role as well and did. In New Castle well and Kent County the judges and Kent County the judges demonstrated the passive theme but the judge in Sussex County was more active.

To explain the “passive role” theme direct quotes from one commissioner and one judge illustrate the extent to their involvement in the case manager program.

Commissioner: “As far as supervising her don’t do that, I don’t supervise her, I don’t check on her, I don’t get reports on how she is doing. I just know what she does when she comes into court. It’s been one of those things working, e. Its been one of those things working, don’t question it.”

This quote illustrated this commissioner’s lack of involvement with the case manager, which was not consistent with the main objective of the case manager program, i.e., to provide administrative and technical support to the three commissioners. Given that objective, it would seem reasonable for the commissioner to be more conversant with the case manager’s activities. That being said, the other two commissioners also could say exactly what the case manager duties were.

The judge’s passive role, as illustrated by the comments below, was more understandable given the management of the court and the purposes of the program.

Judge: “With regards to this particular grant probably nothing other than having applied for it, which is important. But beyond that there are levels of oversight over the Prothonotary’s office and the case managers. I am somewhat removed from that direct oversight but I have overall responsibility.”
Section 3. Perceived Effects to the Implementation of the Case Manager Program

Research question:
✦ How has the program been implemented?

Interview questions:
✦ Do these activities represent a different approach to case processing than the approach before the case manager program was implemented? Why? Why not?
✦ In what ways, if any, have these activities changed case processing in Superior Court? How? How have they not?

There was consistent agreement across all three counties and all informants that the activities for the case manager program represented a different approach to case processing than Superior Court’s operation prior to the implementation of the program. Table 3 illustrates the significant progression of the case manager program in all three counties and describes the activities before program implementation and compares those activities to the after-effects of the case manager program.

Tables 3a, 3b and 3c clearly show that the case manager program was a different approach to case processing than the Court’s operation before the case manager program was implemented. This program also changed criminal case processing in Superior Court as indicated by the informants. The respondents felt that now the court events were flowing better, the court system was more productive, was more efficient, was more effective, had greater accountability and better control and the judges were able to make informed decisions about the cases.

Section 4: Resources

Interview question:

- Did Superior Court, as an organization, provide you with the necessary means to carry out your activities? If yes, how? If no, how not?

All the informants answered “Yes” or believed in some form that Superior Court provided each of them with the proper resources to carry out their duties in the case manager program. The resources that were mentioned by the informants were characteristics of basic office equipment, i.e. comfortable work stations, desks, chairs, new computers, printers, a telephone, file cabinets and other office articles. Some mentioned such articles as up-dated computers with Windows 95 and digital recording capabilities, direct access to judicial computer systems such as the Delaware Justice Information System (DELJIS) and the Judicial Information Center (JIC) for purposes of downloading and monitoring cases.

In Kent and Sussex counties, Superior Court provided them with videophone equipment for video capias, which improved the capias return calendars. Superior Court also provided training sessions on how to use various computer systems and offered courses for employee development. However, most interesting was the comment of one prothonotary who stated that the way Superior Court provided her with the necessary resources was by being open to new and flexible ideas of case management. All informants stated that Superior Court provided them with the necessary means to carry out their duties.

Section 5. Performance Ratings

Research question:

- What are the perceptions of different participants in the program of (a) strengths? (b) weaknesses? (c) ways to improve in the future?

Interview questions:

- Using the A, B, C, D & F grading method we learned in school, how would you rate your own performance as a case manager/ supervisor? Please indicate your strengths and weaknesses.

- Using the A, B, C, D & F grading system, how would you rate the performance of the case manager program regarding case processing, in general? Please indicate strengths and weaknesses.

manager program regarding case processing in general. The majority (11 ½) rated the case manager program an "A". These informants stated that the program has been a plus for Superior Court and it has been an innovative method for criminal case processing.

The informants also stated that they were aware how criminal case processing functioned before the case manager program was implemented compared to how criminal case processing is handled now in satisfaction, confidence, and morale.
We also examined the judgments of the strengths and weaknesses of the case manager program perceived by the program informants categorized by counties.

Section 6: Improvements

Research question:
➤ What are the perceptions of different participants in the program of (a) strengths? (b) weaknesses? (c) ways to improve in the future?

Interview question:
➤ What suggestions, if any, would you have for the court to improve the case manager program?

In each county the major improvement suggested for the court was to expand the case manager program and to obtain additional case managers for the criminal section of Superior Court.

The other suggested improvements were issues of consistency, better communication, pay-grade matters, informational concerns, process concerns.

organizational behavior and development. This clearly shows that the program is a successful one among the program participants because each informant wanted to expand the program. Table 8 describes by county the informants' suggestions for improving the case manager program.

Section 7. Expansion/Steps

Research question:
- What are the perceptions of different participants in the program of (a) strengths? (b) weaknesses? (c) ways to improve in the future?

- Interview question:
In your opinion, should Superior Court expand the program to other criminal case processing? Why? Why not? If yes, what steps should be taken to make that happen?

There is consistent agreement that the case manager program should be expanded to other areas of criminal case processing. There were fourteen informants that answered "Yes" that the program should definitely be expanded to other areas and two "Not sure". The two "Not sure", did not exactly rule out expansion; they just both stated that they would have to consider the areas. They both were comfortable with the present case manager duties, but both also expressed the areas they would consider if the program were expanded.

As far as the ways to make the expansion possible were concerned, the informants did not mention steps. They mentioned functions or events of criminal case processing to which they would consider expanding the case manager program. Table 9 reveals the functions of criminal case processing that should be considered for expansion of the case manager program.

The informants expressed overwhelmingly that the case manager program should be expanded to a specialized area such as to a specific calendar or specific criminal event as opposed to various criminal case processing events or to a specific judge. The informants also mentioned considerable organization and personnel issues to consider for expansion. These functions are long-term outcomes that should be considered as the program progresses because these functions appear to be efficient and effective ways for improving this case manager program.

Managing Cases: Evaluating the Case Manager Program

33
Our Conclusions

The purpose of the evaluation was to document the "lessons learned" from the implementation of the case manager program in order to improve the enterprise. The lessons were as follows:

1 We learned that the case managers provided administrative and technical support to the commissioners and judges as opposed to the commissioners and one master. Also, in each county the case manager performed the duties specified by the county's individual judicial needs, whether that was assisting only the commissioner, only the judge or both the commissioner and the judge.

2 The activities that were specified in the job description for the federally funded criminal case managers were performed to some extent in each county. However, Kent County was the only county that did not deviate from the original duties specified. The duties performed by the case managers were mainly activities of criminal case processing events, such as capias returns, arraignments, and indictments. The case managers also engaged in informational activities such as conducting extensive research on a case and performing data entry.
