

Senior Class History

OLD records, sought out of dusty, musty, seldom opened volumes in the Library, have conclusively demonstrated the surprising fact that the Class of '27 once wore red caps and black socks, carried matches and green baskets and dutifully saluted all upper classmen. They show us, too, that the Sophomores kidnapped our best men a few hours before the "rush" on Frazer Field and then won (?) the battle. But they tell us pleasanter things than these. Our Freshman Banquet, on February fourth, we learn, was eminently successful because the Sophomores did find it out, because they did bombard us from the gallery, because they did fill the Grill Room with hydrogen sulphide gas. Hardly won victories are sweetest. The next important date, the old records show us, was the evening of May fifteenth. Important for two reasons: we burned our green baskets, symbols of Freshman obedience, and went to the Women's College (not on Friday night, either) to do it. But our period of Freshman freedom was soon over. In a day, it seemed, examinations were upon us; and our fateful first year was history. But it was, however, a year not without its honors; Garvine, Beatty, Lohmann and Hubert had all won their "D's" in varsity football.

Our Sophomore year began inauspiciously, but it was by no means an unprosperous year. A defeat by the Freshmen in the first night encounter only taught us how to fit ourselves to meet their strength and we gloriously defeated them in the tug-of-war. Then, for good measure, we gave them ALL a ride into the country the night of the contest. On December twentieth, we chaperoned the "Greenies" on their pilgrimage to Wilmington for their banquet. And (so the old documents note) we ourselves were chaperoned by half a dozen or more husky "bulls" of the Wilmington Police Force. Concerning athletics, our Sophomore year gave us nothing to complain of. Our contests were confined to matches with the Freshmen. But we triumphed over them in track and again in football. In varsity football, also, we could not complain, for Wooten had been added to the list of our letter men.

Another summer having passed, we entered in September, 1926, the calm and quiet of our Junior year. We had left behind us the fever of the Freshman year and the boisterousness and horseplay of our Sophomore and entered into the more serious work of the upper classes. Five of our number, though still on the University roster, were not with us. They were the members of the Foreign Study Group: Stroud, Eyer, Dale, Pool, and Gluck. They had gone out five; would they come back ten? Or could they withstand the charms of "les petites filles?" (We shall here interrupt the old manuscript to say that our fears proved groundless.) But we tucked fear down in our vest along with our neckties and made ready for a glorious Junior Promenade. And it was glorious. Hotel duPont (which is now the Hotel duPont-Biltmore) was ablaze with light on the night (most of the night) of February nineteenth as Class of '27 lavishly entertained the Class of '26. A little later, by way of diversion, we won the interclass basketball championship by defeating the Freshmen—presumptuous even to think of struggling with us! And we considered that another year had closed favorably for our Class.

After this brief chapter on our year as Juniors, we find in the old manuscript eight or nine pages heavily blotted out with India ink, with here and there such phrases as "Delaware Day at Plattsburg," or "Many students get marksmanship medals" and the like left unobscured. The writer has never been able to find out just what was contained on this blotted out portion, but he does know to a certainty that it was a record of our class at Plattsburg, and the author of the manuscript (who is unknown) defaced some after he had written it because it was "better unpublished."

(This marks the end of the old manuscript. The following is a brief rendition by the writer.)

We are now Seniors. We look down from above with a certain feeling of security and of philosophical calm upon the classes struggling and toiling beneath us, and we look upward to the Alumni struggling and toiling above us, and we feel for once that we are the favored—God's elect. Dimly we know that in the world of educated men, we are mere tenderfeet; intensely we feel that we are sitting on top of the world. That it may brighten darker days, let us, then, close our history in this spirit of elation.

Junior Class History

SOME pundit of old—we believe it was Carlyle—once sagaciously remarked, "At the bottom there is no perfect history; there is none such conceivable." Then along came Dumas, Pere, who averred, "Truth is liable to be left-handed in history." And with the mere mention of these utterances, we dismiss lightly the imperfections and falsifications, if there be any, of the Class of 1928.

Our history began auspiciously in September, 1924, and, if the predictions of the almanac-astrologers are correct, it will end under equally favorable circumstances. Our first night at college was featured by the severe trouncing which we administered to the Sophomores, six of whom were sent to the hospital. This hitherto-unheard-of feat of a Freshman Class winning the class-fight on the first night of school was only one of the many distinctive episodes in the history of the class.

The genius of the class in blazing new and difficult trails in the fastness of college tradition was displayed in the choice of class colors and mascot. After prolonged balloting, heliotrope and Copenhagen blue were selected as the class colors.. In a similarly close election, the bat-winged pterodactyl won out over the leaping dinosaur as class mascot.

Undaunted by reversals in the Freshman-Sophomore tug-of-war, the track meet and the football game, we proceeded to annex the gonfalon of the Interclass Basketball League. Wilson, Creamer, Hayes and Lichenstein starred on the team.

Well protected by the gendarmes of the First City of the First State, we staged a successful Freshman Banquet. By judiciously selecting seats underneath the balcony, we were able to escape the usual barrage of ripe hen fruit and flour which the Sophomores are wont to deliver from the gallery.

The class officers for the first year were: Poole, President; Hopkins, Vice-President; Homer Lynch, Secretary; Hoppes, Treasurer; and Broddus Jones, Historian.

The class was lead through a successful second year with the following men as officers: Creamer, President; McLucas, Vice-President; Hoffecker, Secretary; and Wharry, Treasurer. Our average in the Class Fight League was kept at 1.000 when we routed the Class of '29 with a bombardment consisting of the superannuated fruit of the Lycopersicum Esculentum and senile cackle berries.

By a clever ruse, the Freshmen were able to hold their banquet unmolested in Philadelphia. Several brave spirits of our class pursued them to the Quaker City, but were unable to interrupt the festivities. Outnumbered by about 20 to 1, the Sophomores were forced to beat a hasty retreat from Green's Cafe when confronted with the possibility of being thrown down a steep pair of stairs. However, when the party returned, it was showered with a shelling of mud balls. The official score keeper chalked up another win for the Class of '28 when we dragged the first year men through the frigid waters of White Clay Creek in the annual tug-of-war. We were among the "also-rans" in the basketball competition. It was during our second year that the soup strike took place. Several prominent men of the class took an active part in the attempt to have the Commons increase the viscosity of the soup and decrease the coefficient of resistance of the pancakes.

The springtime of the year saw us again electing officers. Wilson, McLucas, Hoffecker, and Derrickson were elected President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, respectively.

Lured on by fantastic tales of the Latin Quarter and Montmartre and stories about the Follies Bergeres, Stein, Harry Lynch and Nevins were marked down as among the missing on our return for our Junior year.

The first half of this year was uneventful. In February we staged the unforgettable Junior Prom in the Gold Ball Room of the duPont-Biltmore Hotel in Wilmington. As the sports editor of the Review so originally said, "A good time was had by all."

During our three years in college, the Class of '28 has contributed many men to the various activities on the campus. Reybold, Hopkins, McCaskey, Creamer, and Loveland have won the coveted "D" for service on the gridiron. Roser and Loveland have done yeoman service for the track team. Lichtenstein and Creamer have scintillated on the basketball court. The former has also won his letter in baseball and the latter has his letter for tennis. Walz, Baker, Hoffecker, Corley and Hynson are members of the rifle team. We were represented on the swimming team by Reybold and Maier.

Reardon, Corley, Craven, Ott, Harry Lynch, Day, Hoopes, Moore, Miller, and Handloff have assisted in the preparation of the simian gabble which the Review serves to offer its readers. The lone member of the class to display any histrionic talent was Ryon, who got his stage experience by haunting the wings of the Georgetown "Opry" house which his uncle owns. Ryon basked in the calcium glare of the spotlight in that never-to-be-forgotten presentation of Ibsen's "Ghosts." He was rewarded by being elected to that select gathering of Immortals, The Footlights Club. The silver-tongued Cohen, the Demosthenes-like Craven, the gifted Moore, and the eloquent Handloff comprised our famous Freshman Debating Team, an aggregation which had no peers. By means of a well-proportioned combination of forensic skill and verbal vehemence, they swept aside all opposition.

Thus endeth the Odyssey of the Ship of '28.

THE ROVER BOYS AT COLLEGE IN NINE EPISODES

No. 1 "Hurrray!" cried Dick, "Here we are."

"Hurrray!" rejoined the fun-loving Max, "You want to keep an eye peeled for the Sophs and cut out the noise." Max, for all his seeming absorption in the lighter side of life, knew a thing or two.

"Well, let's say hurrray for the fun of it anyway," countered Handy, who was rather young and innocent as yet. And thus it was that the Rover boys, along with their new found friends at college, discovered what it was to become a part of the great throbbing center of culture of the state of Delaware. They all said "hurrray" and they all believed "hurrray," as they walked home from Glasgow that evening. You see, Max's cynicism could not prevail against college spirit.

No. 2 "Well," cried Dick, "Now that Jimmie's chairman, we're an honest-to-goodness class." Dick had a sense of the responsibilities of being a member of a particular class, and he understood the need for organization and things like that.

"And now that we're organized, what'll we do?" queried the youngest of the trio, Handy, who was still a little innocent.

No. 3 "Whaddiya mean, Joe fell down stairs?" It was the fun-loving Max who asked the question.

"Well, he just fell down and Bus caught him. There wasn't any prohibition inspectors on duty in Philadelphia and so you see how it was," returned Handy, who was not very innocent now.

"Yes," rejoined Dick with a twinkle in his eye, "Wasn't it a fine idea to have the banquet way off in Philadelphia where there weren't any Sophomores or prohibition agents?"

No. 4 "It's this bird from Virginia," roared the fun-loving Max, "He's got a grudge against the grand old game of bridge."

This sounded like shocking heresy, decided Dick. He judicially allowed the foaming Max to explain.

"Two checker boards in the lounge—can you beat that? And they use wooden horses on them—can you beat that? And they oughta build bleachers for the audience—ya can't beat that!"

No. 5 "Rah, rah, rah, A section, A section, A section!" exclaimed Handy, who had come to believe in all the major virtues.

"Why?" queried Dick.

"Well, we've got the biggest bid for collegiate honors over there. We've got college life that's real college life. Didja ever go into Mary Allen's room?" returned Handy. At the same time he was modestly withholding reference to the life that characterized his own suite, for Handy was not a boy to forget the major virtues.

"Rah, rah, rah, B section, B section, B section," cried the fun-loving Max, and his older brother in one breath. "Didja ever hear of the Boonton group?"

No. 6 "Halp, halp, halp, h—a—I—p!!"

"Yessir, that's my baby." Crash! Crash! Crash! K-bung, K-bung!

"Yessir, up one flight and turn to the right; first door," very efficiently directed the responsible Dick, "You'll find the disturbance in Room 216, A section."

No. 7 "And I shall always maintain that necking furnishes a very praiseworthy form of emotional outlet for the younger generation," cried Dick after due consultation of various Little Blue Books. The evening bull-session was drawing to a close.

"So's your old man," shouted several of the preachers' sons.

No. 8 "Forty-nine bottles sitting on the wall," acutely observed Max.

"Yes," rejoined Dick, "We have become Sophomores."

No. 9 "We've been a pretty good class so far, haven't we?" queried Handy.

"Yes, I think we have really been a great class," rejoined Dick.

"Yeh, as great even as that class Pat Leahy was press agent for last year," observed Max.

"And one thing about us is we haven't sponsored any radicals. When you stop to think about it, there isn't a single member of the class in good standing who has flouted tradition in any real sense," rejoined Dick, "We're a pretty fine and dandy uniform bunch in our ideas about life."

"But we've got one man who is different—one man who is different from the rest of us," observed Max.

"Impossible—who is it?" queried Handy.

"Oh, I know who it is," cried Dick, "It's Eli!"

"Oh, how stupid to forget," rejoined Handy, "Hurray for Old Eli!"
