(A synopsis of four years? No, that could all be done in a few words. I'd rather force the shadow-characters into action again. Ready. Clvde?)

"This is an outrage," cried the Inspector.

"We will not negotiate. Now fork over the cash, pal or we'll ruin your future for a few lousy dollars."

"Bloody robbers," hissed Mortimer.

"Curiouser and curiouser," added the Inspector.

"Sorry, but that's business. If you wanted an education you should have gone elsewhere," grinned the Bursar.

Suddenly, a new megaphone-boostered voice broke the stalemate.

"Open your books or we'll cut your budget!" cried a strange bird.

"Bah! It's the Dodo and his friends from the state legislature."

"Give it up, Bursar, or we'll be forced to ask that dreaded question 'Public or Private?'"

With a single, howling "Bah!" the Bursar disappeared down a deep hole.

"He took my wallet, Inspector!" moaned an outraged Mortimer.

"Forget your wallet. I think we've got other problems."

"Hello, I'm the Dodo and these boys are Legislators. You didn't happen to see a white rabbit around here didja?"

"Yes, he was heading off towards Dover when we last saw him."

"Good . . . uh . . . I mean . . . that's too bad. We could have worked so well together."

At this the Legislators snickered as if some private joke has just been unleashed.

"Well, as I said, I'm the Dodo and I think it's time for a Caucus-race. Wadda ya think, fellas?"

"Sure thing, boss."

"What is the object of this Caucus-race?" queried the Inspector.

"It's our job. That's what we got elected to do."

"But you're all running around in a circle! You're not doing anything constructive."

"Now you're getting the idea, bub. We run around in circles so it looks as if we're doing something. That way we get re-elected."

"It looks idiotic to me," added Mortimer.

"Now that's gratitude for you. We scare the Bursar away and you make fun of us," said the Dodo with a mock wince.

"Yes, but he took my assistant's wallet," complained Clyde.

"So? We tried didn't we? Do you think we had anything to gain by standing up to the Bursar? Do you think we care whether the university is public or private?"

"Well"

"You will vote for us, won't you? Look what we've done for you."

"I think that we shall be going now."

"Okay, leave if you want, but you wouldn't want to make a campaign contribution wouldja?"

Inspector Clyde and Mortimer ignored this last remark and walked across the grass toward a strange clump of vegetation as the Dodo cackled on in the background.

"Hey, hide you Legislators, the white rabbit's coming. Somebody tell him the vote's tomorrow."

Mortimer and the Inspector quickly came upon a shapeless mass wedged atop a giant mushroom. The mass was puffing smoke from a hookah with one hand and guzzling cheap beer with the other.

"Hey man, the name's Studentbody and I'm wrecked. Who are you dudes?"

"Yes, well we're strangers here . . ."

"We're all strangers here, man. Pull up a toadstool My real name's In-State Studentbody and I'd introduce youse to my brother, Outa State, but he spends most of his time riding buses away from here."

"No loss, I'm sure," replied Mortimer congenially.

"Youse guys want to get wrecked?"

"No thank you, we're normal."

"But there ain't nothing to do around here but get wrecked."

"You could do something constructive for this place."

"But man, why bother? We can't change nothing and besides, I'd much rather get wrecked and pretend the problems aren't there."

"What about art? Doesn't creativity mean anything around here?"

"Art? Yeah, we got art. We go down and watch Marx Brothers flicks once a week before we get wrecked."

"Poor deranged cretin. I wish there was something we could do for him, but I don't think euthanasia is legal around here," said Clyde.

"Hey man, who cares, you know?"

"Well, be seeing you," offered Clyde as they turned to go.
