Homecoming election questioned

by Kean Burenga
Assistant News Editor

Several sources in the Greek community have alleged widespread cheating during last week's elections for Homecoming King and Queen.

see editorial p. 8

Cheating in the elections was to be discussed at the Greek Council meeting last night, according to Karen Manzo (NU 88), an Alpha Phi sister and president of The Panhellenic Council.

"There may have been cheating," Manzo said, but she added she did not think there was any "blatant cheating."

A university junior, who requested anonymity, told The Review several Sigma Phi Epsilon brothers bragged after the Homecoming Sock Hop of stuffing ballot boxes.

The source said one brother claimed he had voted more than 60 times.

David Schneider (AS 88), president of Sigma Phi Epsilon, said students complain because his fraternity "has a winner every year."

"We tried to keep things as honest as possible," he said, "there was no way we could stuff the ballot box."

Schneider said he had heard some rumblings from sorority members because the final tally of ballots was conducted at the Alpha Phi house.

This year the election was "very close," said Michael Smith (AS 88), co-programming chairman of the Inter-Fraternity Council, adding there are always rumors of cheating after the elections.

Both the voting sites and the vote tabulations were supervised by Greeks, explained Smith.

"There were not neutral people counting votes," he said, adding the system relied on "personal integrity."

The notion that cheating happens every year, with no way of guarding against it, was discussed at the Panhellenic Council meeting Monday night, according to Cynthia Moore (ED 88), council secretary.

Moore said the consensus at the meeting was that if any cheating occurred, it happened at the voting sites and not when the votes were counted.

One sorority sister, who also declined to be identified, said

A trial which began Tuesday in Wilmington will force universities to re-examine the entire system of fraternities, according to Sigma Phi Epsilon President Dave Schneider.

Schneider explained, the university will have to decide if fraternities are "financially feasible," since there will be a similar lawsuit within the next year.

Former student Jeffrey V. Furek is currently suing former Sigma Phi Epsilon member Joseph Donchez, the national chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon, and the university for a hazing incident which occurred Dec. 4, 1980.

Furek, who entered Delaware in 1979 on a full football scholarship, was burned during Sig Ep's "Hell Night," the night many initiation activities take place.

According to Furek's original complaint, Joseph Donchez "poured a foreign substance (oven cleaner) over Furek's body when the defendant knew he should be known that the use of such a substance created an unreasonable risk of harm to Furek."

Furek suffered second-degree burns on his face, chest and back, and due to the physical and emotional aftermath of the incident he did not return to the university.

Furek holds the national chapter of Sig Ep liable because he says it did not enforce the standards and policies of personal behavior, including hazing. He holds the

Jones moves to untangle MIS puzzle

New consultants hired

by Cathleen Fromm
Administrative News Editor

To ensure on-schedule completion of the university's Management Information Services' $12 million computer conversion, President Russel C. Jones has hired an outside consultant to evaluate the department and the conversion.

The evaluation is costing $42,000, according to Raymond I. Peters III, executive assistant to the president.

According to Jones, consultants from George Kaludis and Associates Inc. of Nashville, Tenn., have been evaluating the academic computing center for the past two months.

The report is due in two weeks, Jones said.

In March, the university hired Dr. Kenneth King, an official from Cornell University's computing center, to evaluate the progress of the computer conversion.

"[The report] said things were going well," said former President E.A. Trabant.

He added, "We were very fortunate to have [University Provost Dr. L. Leon] Campbell directing the project."

articles that appeared in The Review last March, many MIS employees were concerned the conversion would not be completed on time because of a lack of experience on the part of MIS Director John Marrazzo.

Jones stated that the five-year computer conversion from the Burroughs to the IBM mainframe, which began in 1984, will be completed on schedule.

He said, however, "I heard enough squeaky wheels [within MIS] that I had better take a look."

David Hollowell, the newly selected senior vice president for administration, told The Review last week that "several vice presidents" have expressed concern that the five-year computer con-

Parity characterizes GOP presidential race

And George Bush makes five.

Now that the vice president has announced his intentions, he joins four others looking to continue the Republican legacy of President Ronald Reagan: ex-governor Pete du Pont of Delaware, ex-Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr., Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, and ex-evangelist Pat Robertson.

Another strong contender for the Republican bid, Sen. Robert Dole of Iowa, is expected to announce his candidacy in the first week of November.

The battle for the Republican nomination will be lively. The self-immolation of the Democratic party — specifically Senators Gary Hart and Joe Biden — has strengthened an already fierce belief within the GOP that the 1980s will be a conservative decade from beginning to end.

With expectations running high, each of the Republican candidates believe that securing their party's nomination is an almost certain ticket to the White House.

Without a heavy favorite, the Republicans have a staple of capable and distinctive politicians. The nomination should come down to three candidates — Bush, Dole and Kemp.

Bush would seem to have the early edge. As the vice president, he has had six years to consolidate party support behind him. He also has an admirable record: congressman, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, U.S. Ambassador to China and later to the United Nations. Bush was also decorated as a fighter pilot in World War II.

Certain stigmas still cling to him, though. Like most vice presidents in the past, he has virtually disappeared from the consciousness of voters. On his recent tour of Poland, Bush had to hire two camera crews to follow him around the country — no American television network would send a crew. To add injury to insult, no incumbent vice president has become chief executive since Martin Van Buren, 150 years ago. Bush also suffers under the voters' perception of him as a weak leader.

Kemp, on the other hand, is seen specifically as a leader. The former NFL quarterback from Buffalo received praise from all sides for the tax reform bill, which he conceived and then transformed into law. Few had thought the minority congressman capable of such action before this, but success has led to optimism from both Kemp and his growing number of followers.

Dole, however, is not a new kid in town. The senator from Iowa was a vice presidential nominee in 1976, running with then-president Gerald Ford. Dole then was perceived as cold and harsh. Ten years later, he has worked to change that image. To a large extent he has succeeded, by stressing his humble beginnings.

Dole has been sketchy so far on national issues, but he could pull together both conservatives and moderates in the party.

A dark horse in this election, Robertson was weakened by the disclosure of his son's illegitimacy and his attempt to cover it up by tampering with his wedding date. Unlike Democratic candidates who have been struck by the media scourge, he has fought back and vowed to continue his candidacy.

As a candidate, Robertson has called for a return to 'old time' values — including, ironically enough, abstaining from premarital sex. While the former evangelist's chances of securing the nomination are close to nil, he could have a profound effect on the nomination, especially if he steals support from Bush.

Without that support, Bush could prove most vulnerable at next year's Republican Convention, especially to Dole and, quite possibly, Kemp.

Missing marine's parents share memories

by Corey Ullman

Assistant Features Editor

Marine Major Daniel Haworth, a University of Delaware alumnus and champion swimmer, is presumed dead after his helicopter crashed in the Persian Gulf on Oct. 4.

"It takes a special cut of a guy to be a Marine — Danny had what it took," commented Mr. Haworth.

Sitting in their comfortable home in northern Wilmington, Mr. and Mrs. Haworth discussed the fate of their son Daniel.

Now, almost two weeks after the accident, there is still no word on Haworth, and according to Lt. Col. Titus, the search has been called off.

"I think we have pretty much reconciled ourselves to the fact that what's left of Danny is down there [in the Gulf]," said Mr. Haworth.

"The worst part is the waiting and the not knowing," he added. "If [military officials] would even call us once or twice a day and say 'we're calling to let you know we've had contact with the Gulf and there is no news' — if they would only do that — but there's just no word from the Gulf."

Lack of communication between the North Carolina base where Haworth was stationed and the Persian Gulf has posed a big problem for the Haworths, he said.

Mr. Haworth explained he has been in contact with the offices of Sen. Joe Biden, Gov. Mike Castle and other officials in order to express dissatisfaction with the communication between the posts.

Maj. Daniel Haworth

"Hopefully, they will reinforce the dissatisfaction that Danny's commanding officer has expressed to the Commandant of the Marine Corps," explained Mr. Haworth. "The situation is unacceptable."

Mr. Haworth said his son was a fair student with more C's than B's and a dedicated swimmer during his college career.

"He was a quiet guy, as a kid he was good at driving cars and wrecking them," commented Mr. Haworth.

"I should have realized then that he was a different cut from the rest of us," he explained.

Although Haworth never expressed an interest in either flying or the military to his parents, his parents recalled his acceptance of an offer from the Marine Corps to enlist right after his college graduation.

"Before he left, we couldn't get him to talk, but after the Marines got hold of him, he was a different person — we couldn't get him to shut up, then," said Mr. Haworth.

After admission into the Corps, Haworth became intensely involved with training, he said.

"A lot of what he did he couldn't tell us," explained Mr. Haworth. "He worked with FBI agents in New York City landing choppers on buildings and learning how to drive cars like those men in the movies."

"You have to be half-crazy to do things like that and enjoy doing them — but Danny did," he said.

Haworth firmly believed in the U.S. presence in the Persian Gulf and he justified his belief in a letter to his parents dated from mid-September.

"I am convinced we should be here," he wrote. After

40 UD band members play in finale with Philly Pops

by Fletcher Chambers

Staff Reporter

For an artist, it's the Met. An Actor? Broadway. For area musicians — it's the Academy.

Nearly 40 members of the university marching band performed at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia Sunday, Monday and Wednesday nights with conductor Peter Nero and the Philly Pops.

The band members were featured with the Pops during the finale of the program titled "Milestones in Music."

The marching band was an unusual ensemble to play at the Academy, according to Alan Hamant, director of the university marching band.

"It's a rare thing," he said, adding that their arrival came as a complete surprise to most audience members.

"It was pretty exciting," Hamant said. "There was a very nice response from the crowd."

The band was contacted about playing with the Pops early in October and many students embraced it as an opportunity to play with renowned musicians, he explained.

The recommendations of several members of the Pops and the Philadelphia Orchestra, who also teach in the Delaware area, led to the selection of the university marching band, according to Hamant. The students were selected because of their reputation as a "first-rate band," he said.

The university musicians performed an excerpt from one of their field shows as they marched into the Academy and took their places on stage. They accompanied the Pops during Nero's "We The People Fanfare" and John Phillip Sousa's "Liberty Bell" march.

Nero was commissioned to compose the fanfare for Philadelphia's Constitution

Day celebration which took place in September.

"I was really nervous on Sunday," said Robin McLean (BE 89), who is normally a flutist. She said it was the first time she had ever played drums in public.

"The audience is a very musically educated crowd," said university percussionist Robert Pigford (EG 91). "They know what to listen for and they know what they like to hear."

He said the musicians are versatile and many also play with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Tim Fioravanti (AS 89), drum line captain and arranger of much of the line's music, said he never expected to play at the Academy — at least not while in college.

"Two of my goals in life have been to be an arranger, and to play in an orchestra," he added.

"Combining both is just the ultimate."

Council recommends use of water safety measures

by Fran Battaglia

Staff Reporter

As a result of their investigation of the Avon oil spill last March, a council of state and local officials announced safety recommendations for area water supplies Tuesday night.

The New Castle County Hazardous Materials Advisory Council, which conducted the investigation at the request of the state General Assembly, stressed the need for long-term programs and procedures to protect water resources.

The council reported that "Avon representatives set an example of positive response in the clean-up and correction effort," following the March 14 spill.

The mishap sent 6,000 gallons of heating oil into a tributary of the White Clay Creek behind the company's Newark distribution center on Ogletown Road.

Among the recommendations presented by the council at the public hearing held in the Newark Municipality Building, emergency planning procedures are already in place.

Council member Richard Dworsky, representing the New Castle County Water Resource Agency, said the council recommended that water supply facilities install in-stream water quality monitors to analyse the water quality before it is treated at the plant.

The council also said each water facility should have a contingency plan to handle

Central Campus's Warner Hall is undergoing $394,500 in comprehensive renovations to preserve its historic character.

$394,500 spent on renovations for Warner Hall

by James Cordrey

Staff Reporter

The university is spending $394,500 to give Warner Hall a new look within the next year.

Lounge and room renovations in the dorm, totalling $109,500, will be completed by the end of the month and heating and plumbing renovations for $285,000 will be finished by the end of next summer, according to Tim Becker, assistant director of Housing Maintenance.

Becker said $72,000 has already been spent on asbestos removal and $16,000 for refinishing the floors in the rooms.

The remaining $21,500 has been allocated for refurbishing and repainting the lounge, and carpeting the halls, Becker explained.

Several Warner residents said the lounge and room renovations are important, but the heating and plumbing should have been a priority.

According to Becker, Housing Maintenance planned to do the heating and plumbing work this past summer, but were forced to reschedule when no contractors bid on the job.

Since Warner is the oldest dorm on campus, Becker said, it has needed work for a long time, specifically the heating system which is 70 years old. "Rather than do nothing," he said, "we decided to do what we could, now."

Despite improvements being made in Warner Hall, one resident said important repairs are being neglected.

According to Jennifer Wolff (AS 90) the balconies are unsafe to walk under, and the rotten wood attracts ants on the second floor.

Becker said the balconies do need a facelift, but that there is no structural problem.

This winter, Housing Maintenance plans to disassemble the support beams and improve their appearance, the assistant director explained.

Becker added that area managers, RA's and students make suggestions for improvements and the Office of Housing and Residence Life must decide which are most important. "We have to prioritize," he said, "and realistically, some can wait."

Becker stated that the costs of the renovations on Warner Hall are not the highest that have been spent on one dorm.

The heating systems in Cannon and New Castle were replaced for $250,000 in 1983, he said, and the heaters in the Towers were replaced in 1977 for $890,000.

Becker explained money for renovations is allocated from specific funds by the university.

The heating work in Warner Hall will be funded from a mechanical systems reserve, financing for the furniture is allocated from an equipment replacement budget, and the floors were funded by a renovations reserve, Becker continued.

The equipment replacement reserve, he explained, has a $120,000 yearly allotment for carpeting and furniture to be spent on dorms.

Becker said the money which composes the funds comes from students' dormitory room rentals.

Vicki Haaf (AS 89), a resident of Warner Hall, said the amount of money being spent on the renovations is too much for any single dorm.

"Our tuition goes up every year and this is what they are doing with it," she said.

Cathy Davis, area manager for Central Campus, said the renovations are worth the money because the Warner lounge is treated better than most other dorm lounges.

UD considers restrictive smoking policy

by Mary Kane
Staff Reporter

"Smoking" and "Non-Smoking" signs may soon be more conspicuous in a number of university buildings, according to President Russel C. Jones.

The Committee on Grounds and Buildings will meet Oct. 30 to discuss a more restrictive smoking policy, as approved by the Faculty Senate last spring. The committee will decide whether to pass the policy to the board of trustees for consideration.

The policy states, "There is an increasing awareness and concern about the detrimental impact of smoke to the health of non-smokers." It explains that while a new policy is necessary, "a total ban on smoking in university facilities is not presently acceptable."

April Anderson (AS 89) complained, "There are designated smoking areas currently established, but nobody enforces them. Why would a new policy change anything?"

The university's resolution would include the establishment of more specific smoking areas. Identification procedures would include signs for both smoking and non-smoking areas.

Vice President for Student Affairs Stuart Sharkey said the policy is meant to be fair to everyone involved. He said, "The time has come where it is necessary to implement a new policy because of the number of complaints being made by students regarding smoking in the classrooms and dining halls."

According to the resolution, smoking would be prohibited in the following areas:

- academic areas such as classrooms, lecture halls, seminar rooms, laboratories and computing facilities;

- general areas such as conference rooms, auditoriums, exhibition areas, indoor athletic facilities, theaters, pavilions and reception areas;

- special function areas, including health facilities, elevators, stairwells, restrooms and customer service areas.

The areas where smoking will be permitted are:

- About one third of large, well-ventilated areas;

- Large group function areas, as determined appropriate to the nature of the scheduled event by the directors of the Student Center, Food Service and conference centers;

- Corridors, hallways and lobbies, unless "No Smoking" signs are posted.

Sharkey explained that when dealing with opposing views such as those of smokers and non-smokers, "Reducing clashes will be beneficial to all."

Karen Seeman (AS 89) argued, "It doesn't seem that the university is providing an adequate number of areas where students can smoke, considering the number of smokers that attend this school."

But according to Rich Lewis (AG 90), "Although I myself smoke, I can respect others who don't by refraining from smoking in public areas. This may be difficult for the full-time token."

He added, "Exceptions must be made for those trying to keep their good health."

emergencies similar to the Avon spill.

Thomas Crosby, a council member representing the state Department of Natural Resources and Environmental Control, said that the Delaware Underground Storage Tank Act passed in July 1985 should be amended to include regulation of tanks similar to Avon's.

State Rep. David Ennis, council chairman, said the hearing was called to inform the public of the investigation and the council's recommendations.

"We wanted to hear from the public about how they think things were handled and if they had any additional ideas," Ennis said.

The Avon incident occurred after an employee failed to shut off a valve during the transfer of heating oil between the plant's two 10,000 gallon storage tanks.

After seeping underground, the spill flowed into White Clay Creek, which supplies Wilmington Suburban Water Corporation.

Since Wilmington Suburban currently has no access to any water source aside from the White Clay Creek, the council also recommended that the plant install another intake valve at Red Clay Creek "to provide flexibility in selecting source water."

Newark officials received over 600 phone calls from residents complaining about the foul tasting and smelly water during the three days the oil tainted city supplies. However, no one became seriously ill, according to the report.

Although Avon and several agencies knew about the problem and dealt with it immediately at the location, Newark officials were not informed of the spill by Wilmington Suburban, which supplies one-third of the city's water.

City officials were alerted of the potentially hazardous situation the morning following the spill, when it was announced by news media.

Ennis said that the Avon spill received a great deal of inconsistent and contradictory media attention due to an excess of agencies that disclosed information about the incident.

The State Emergency Response Team (SERT) is now utilizing a public affairs officer to provide better public information communications.

"SERT is a multi-disciplinary approach to handling an emergency situation," according to Herm Bruce, a SERT member. "We utilize various professional abilities to handle each aspect of an emergency situation."

Alan Edwards, director of operations at Avon, said the company is preparing to install a new $60,000 fuel tank system to replace the existing tanks.

"This new system is fool-proof," Edwards said. "[The new tank] will have steel walls, be mostly above ground, equipped with a high-level alarm system, and enclosed in a concrete building."

Police look into Sept. Towne Court rape

by Diane Moore
Staff Reporter

Newark Police have identified a suspect in connection with the knife-point rape on Sept. 1 at Towne Court apartments, according to police.

The suspect was arrested and charged with the burglary of a Park Place apartment and indecent exposure, police said, after he was found masturbating on the university mall, three hours after the Towne Court rape.

Detective Corporal William Nefosky of the Newark Police said the FBI are comparing pubic hairs of the suspect to those found at the scene of the rape.

"We are waiting for the evidence to be analyzed, but the FBI laboratory is really backed-up," Nefosky said. "[The results] may take six to eight weeks."

The suspect, whose name police will not release until the evidence is confirmed, is being held in jail, according to Nefosky.

"We can't release his name [or where he is being held] because he was not arrested for the rape, and we don't have enough [information] to back up our statements," Nefosky explained.

The suspect is scheduled to be indicted on Nov. 11, said

Nefosky, and following the indictment, the hearing date will be announced.

Police also have a second suspect, in connection with the rape, who was arrested for climbing into a balcony and breaking into an apartment, according to Nefosky.

"By that nature, I must tend to think he might be involved," Nefosky said.

He recently took over the case and could not release when or where the arrest occurred.

If the results from the FBI analysis are negative, Nefosky explained, he will start to investigate the second suspect in connection with the rape.

Since the beginning of the school year, Nefosky said, there have been two one-on-one rape offenses and other sexual assaults.

Sharkey: Red tape hinders student leaders

by Julie Williams
Staff Reporter

The frustrations of student leaders are often due to the structure of university organizations and clubs, Vice-President for Student Affairs Stuart J. Sharkey told the Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress at their meeting Monday.

"What it really boils down to is that the whole structure of student governments, student organizations, and clubs is inappropriate and not designed to get things done," he asserted.

The problem lies with the time structure for students taking office, Sharkey continued, since there are only three or four months for student leaders to get a maximal amount of work accomplished.

Student elections are held in the spring. New leaders attempt to begin the organizational process, Sharkey said, but have little time to do so because of their final exams, and then their summer jobs.

The months of October, November, February and March are the most productive, Sharkey pointed out. Accomplishments during the remaining months are often hindered by final exam pressures, elections or vacations.

"There's nothing in our society that can get done in three months," he said.

As a possible solution to this structural problem, Sharkey said he would advocate a three-year term of office for the president of DUSC and other organizations.

DUSC President Rick Crossland disagreed with this idea.

"I think if you had a three-year term you would have presidential burnout," he stated.

Instead of an extended term, Crossland suggested that former DUSC officers move up to the presidency since many have already established good relations with leaders of other organizations.

Students face many obstacles when dealing with administrators as well, Sharkey said. Resources are more accessible to the administration than to the student body, he continued.

Also, students must do "a juggling act" to balance their workloads with leadership and involvement in clubs, whereas most administrators concentrate largely on their careers, Sharkey stated.

"After all, you don't do anything but work in student government, right? There are no classes, no exams, no labs, no social life, it's all student government and your clubs," Sharkey added humorously.

In order to be successful, student leaders must be prepared with the necessary information when dealing with the administration, he said.

"I can tell you exactly why they [student governments] weren't successful by what they did not do, or simply how they did it stupidly, ineptly, without doing their homework," Sharkey said.

"Therein lies the crux of why student leaders are frustrated and why they think too often the administration is not responsive," he continued.

Student leaders need to understand the bureaucratic structure in order to make progress, Sharkey said, "and [learn] how to play the game."

"This is real life; this is not high school student council," he stated.

Success in student office depends on how quickly one learns about the bureaucracy within the university, Sharkey declared.

Learning how to accomplish things by knowing the appropriate faculty and administrators from which to seek support is also important, he added.

Since there is a new university president, the student

Rick Crossland

Greek Gripes!

Since former university student Jeffrey V. Furek received second-degree burns on his face, chest and back seven years ago due to a fraternity hazing prank, the university and the Greek system have taken serious actions to make sure similar incidents don't happen again.

The fraternities have adopted strict anti-hazing codes and the university now requires all new fraternity members to sign an anti-hazing pact.

But despite the outward appearance of compliance, hazing still goes on in the Greek system at the University of Delaware.

True, hazing is not anywhere near as bad or as visible as it used to be. It's now more limited and less visible, but still just as dangerous.

Pledges are told they do not have to do anything they don't want to do and are free to refrain from activities they feel are not in their best interest. But although they are not physically coerced, pledges today are psychologically forced to participate in hazing rituals.

Greek members wield tremendous power over pledges eager to join the group — a power that is easily abused.

Now that the university is in the midst of its fall pledge period, we hope the Greek community will seriously question the integrity of their initiation rites and urge all pledges to stand up for their own rights as well.

Hazing, however, isn't the only thing marring the reputation of the university's Greek system these days. Members from within the Greek community are alleging widespread cheating in last week's Homecoming elections.

From the sheer number of allegations on all sides and the extremely suspicious circumstances surrounding the voting tables and vote count, it seems almost certain that the fix was in.

The incident has made not only the Greeks look bad, but further degraded the reputation of the university — already stigmatized by the prevalence of academic dishonesty.

We call on the Greek Council to get the matter out in the open and devise a plan for next year that will allow for a fair election.

Asphalt Jungles

We are living in a state of emergency — or at least a city. There is no where to run, no where to hide to avoid . . . the dreaded parking ticket.

The Review recently reported the temporary elimination of 100 on-campus parking spaces in the conveniently located Russell lot. Fifty of those are to be removed permanently.

When I walked around campus the fateful day the story was published, students fumed. "As if parking wasn't bad enough!" Jokes by commuters of leaving for class at 6 a.m. to secure spots may well become a reality.

But the school day doesn't last forever, and students have to head home. And for many, the parking ordeal continues. Residents of nearby apartment communities battle into the wee hours of the morning to stop public enemy No. 1.

As a resident of Towne Court apartments, I am a concerned participant and sympathize with other commuters who live in Newark apartment complexes.

Here is my own plight: I left The Review at 4 a.m. after parking all afternoon and night without a sticker in a blue lot (ha, ha Public Safety). All I could think of was getting up in four short hours for class; my bed was calling me. I drove aimlessly through three parking lots near my apartment to no avail and weighed my options.

I could have triple parked in a fire lane, but someone already beat me to it. I could have driven over a curb and parked on part of the sidewalk, but my car doesn't have a "climb" option. I could have blown my car up on the spot.

All options were rejected.

Ten contemplating minutes later, a brilliant idea hit me right in the face.

Someone had already parked halfway in front of a yellow curb, so why not finish it off? At least that way both of us would get tickets, even though my half had the fire hydrant.

The penalty for that is pretty strict (at least $30 I don't have). I decided to back out and do the loop again.

Suddenly, from far across the complex, I saw the light — reverse lights! (Some student was probably going to spend the night in the Russell lot to secure a prime spot for the day ahead).

I felt like I had just snagged the last parking space on earth. Well, maybe not, but certainly the last vacancy in Towne Court. But what about getting the rest of the way to my doorstep?

Towne Court is not — as we all know from The Review's Police Report — the safest place for a woman alone at night.

With keys clenched in fist, I ventured out of the security bubble of my locked car into the darkness. (For those of you who don't know, the sun is never up at 4 a.m.). I guess the man who keeps exposing himself all over Newark was off that night because I made it to my warm bed to slumber happily.

The only thing wrong with this story is that it happens every night in every complex, and there is no solution but to stay home. Weekends are an even worse scene.

I hear horror stories of cars being towed "at owner's expense." Why should you have to pay when you never wanted it towed in the first place?

While the university tries to figure out what to do on campus, what are these complexes doing to combat this ongoing dilemma?

I don't see too much asphalt spreading going on in Newark.

Beat Freaks

It's Saturday night. A student is walking on the sidewalk down Elkton Road, away from 7-Eleven. He turns his head over his shoulder to watch a car coming towards him.

The car swerves at him — clipping his hand and knocking a just-purchased soft drink out of his hand. As the victim collects himself, he runs after the car in anger.

The car stops.

As he approaches the car, two linebacker-sized individuals emerge from the car. The driver approaches the student in a boxing stance.

As the victim tries to speak, he is hit in the face — square and hard — and he falls to the ground. When he gets up he is hit again, then again.

When he's on the ground he is kicked in the back.

Scott Graham

A University Police car pulls up. As the assailants flee, the victim turns to catch the license plate number of their car, as blood trickles out of his mouth onto the pavement.

Another witness notes the model and make of the car. A Newark Police car soon arrives.

The victim sits in the squad car and is comforted as he hears the charges "hit-and-run" and "assault and battery" quoted by Officer S., the policeman at the scene.

The victim is comforted, but he's mad as hell because he's never been beaten up before. He's never been afraid of being beaten up before.

I know, because I was the victim.

I've never thrown myself into violent situations before. In fact, I find people who are about to beat each other over some insignificant issue, kind of humorous.

Why did these guys swerve their car at me? I don't know. Maybe they didn't like the way I looked. That kind of attitude runs rampant here.

But to try to run someone down, then proceed to beat the sh out of him — for whatever demented reason — deserves punishment.

Serious punishment.

I'm not serious by nature, but I decided to get serious this time. I told the officer to call me when he got anything done involving this case. He agreed.

I was never called.

I found out the officer that was at the scene has been out sick.

In fact, in the words of the desk sergeant, "He won't be back, oh, probably till the end of the month. He's had some surgery done."

Well, my condolences Officer S., but I was beaten up four weeks ago and each day I forget more of what the beefy jerk looked like.

The desk sergeant told me that the case wouldn't be transferred to another officer — that Officer S. would take care of it whenever he got back.

Great. That will be six, maybe seven weeks after the incident actually occurred. I don't know if I could positively identify the guy now, let alone two weeks from now.

I talked to a friend who was working in a store on Main Street when a shoplifter left the store with some merchandise.

When he chased after the shoplifter, he ended up getting beaten up too. My friend also got the license plate number of the car.

After weeks passed, the Newark Police told him he had to go to the shoplifter's house in order to positively identify him.

Brilliant idea. While my friend would be positively identifying the shoplifter, the shoplifter would be identifying my friend so he could positively beat him up whenever he saw him again.

My friend decided not to go. I don't blame him.

Whatever happened to two-way mirrors, or maybe polaroid shots of suspects?

Isn't a license plate number and a detailed description enough to bring a suspect into the station?

Whatever happened to protecting the victim and seeing that justice is done?

Assaults happen everyday in Newark. If everyone was handled like these two, there would be a lot of fist-flying maniacs running around — knowing that they can freely waffle their victims and get away with it.

Newark better get a strict, safe and consistent policy on assaults before more guilty get away with harming the innocent.

Fox named All-American

Lloyd Fox, former Review photo editor, has been named an Associated Collegiate Press All-American for 1987. This is the third consecutive year Fox, a senior at the university, has been named All-American.

Fox's awards made the University of Delaware the only east coast school to win an All-American award this year.

Fox received the first honorable mention in the sports category for a picture of the university soccer team. He also received first honorable mention for a shot of the university sailing club.

All pictures must have been published in a school paper or yearbook to qualify for the award. Both of Fox's photos appeared in issue of The Review.

Over 150 universities entered this year's contest from the 900 that are members of the Associated College Press.

As an All-American, Fox will receive an award plaque and will be recognized by the Collegiate Press. Fox will also travel to St. Louis for the national award ceremonies on Oct. 29.

In 1985, Fox won first place in the features category for a photo of the Greek Games tug-of-war. He took the top spot for features again in 1986 for his shot of the Space Shuttle astronauts funeral at Dover Air Force Base.

In addition to working for The Review, Fox has freelanced for the Philadelphia Inquirer and the Wilmington News Journal.

Letters

No condom sales on campus

To the editor:

We give the university administration our full support for their program being devised to make students more conscious about the dangers of AIDS. It would be a drastic mistake, however, to include the distribution of condoms in this program.

Apparently the thinking behind such a plan is that students are going to have sex anyway, so let's do what we can to make it "safe sex."

This idea is frightening because it is common knowledge that condoms do not provide complete protection against pregnancy or AIDS.

As students are exposed to the phrase "safe sex" more and more and see condom advertisements and vendors become the norm, they are likely to become numb to the fact that "safe sex" still carries the risk of death.

We are confident that the administration does not intend to condone irresponsible sex, but the distribution of condoms on campus does condone and even encourage sex.

Many students establish lifelong habits and values while in college. The placement of already available condoms in residence halls recognizes sex as an appropriate college activity and encourages students to experiment with it.

The administration claims to be concerned about student health and well-being. They can best show that concern by encouraging students to abstain from sex and educating them of the dangers of irresponsible sex — not by passing out condoms.

If students still choose to have sex, they can walk to Main Street and buy a condom.

'Vision' offends black students

To the editor:

Since the beginning of the school year, I have been surrounded, by The Review and other papers, with articles heralding the coming of President Jones' "Project Vision."

Aspects of this "Vision" include the strategic improvement of all educational programs (even if the "all" doesn't include the arts), videotaping engineering courses (whatever happened to student/teacher interaction?), and renovating the president's house, which already takes up half of Kent Way (not much, just $243,000 worth).

I guess the "Vision" had something to do with an interesting little tidbit that I received in the mail a week and a half ago.

This bit of campus mail, sent from the associate director of admissions, requested

"the names and addresses of any people that I knew that may be interested in attending the University of Delaware. President Jones would like to increase the black population here at Delaware."

What's wrong? A couple of things, actually.

It seems that the university is throwing all of its energy into bringing more blacks here, when the main problem seems to be keeping us here.

I've seen too many black students fly the coop because they didn't care for the university's general attitude towards the black student population. Second, the letter makes you wonder if the university is just interested in making their quota, rather than in the people that make that quota.

After all, more blacks means more government funding, isn't that the general rule? This kind of attitude makes blacks want to leave.

President Jones, what your "Vision" is lacking is true insight in finding a solution to an ongoing problem here at the university. It involves understanding of the black culture (and I don't mean taking your kids to see "Song of the South"), as well as the willingness to learn about it.

I heartily suggest that you take the time to do so before even considering bringing more blacks on campus.

No UD funds for Jones' nanny

To the editor:

While visiting Delaware during Homecoming weekend, I was sickened to read an article which appeared in the Oct. 9 issue of The Review. The article dealt with the search for a nanny for President Jones' children.

I have a question: Why is the university footing the bill for this service?

Child care is a problem that affects many parents who are the employees of this university. Unfortunately, not everyone is able to afford adequate child care (let alone a live-in nanny).

Why can't President Jones and his wife provide the care themselves? One can pretty well guess that their combined salaries are more than adequate to obtain their own child care.

Why not let them get their own nanny and work on a program to provide adequate child care for university faculty and staff.

In conclusion, I agree that President Jones is doing a great deal to improve this university and is spending a lot of time to do so, but let's not forget the many other employees at Delaware who are doing the same to make the university an exceptional institution.

Council to honor 2 tavern owners for pact efforts

by Lisa Moorhead

Copy Editor

City Council Monday night approved resolutions commending two members of the Newark Alcohol Abuse Commission, who will be honored at the Hospitality Covenant signing celebration Oct. 20.

Leonard Reed, owner of the Deer Park Tavern, and Larry Garyantes, owner of the Down Under Restaurant, will be commended at the celebration for their support and work in creating the Tavern and Package Store Responsible Beverage Service Program.

Reed and Garyantes have both served for six years on the Alcohol Abuse Commission, according to David B. Fitzgerald III, commission chairman.

Reed was especially helpful in providing materials, such as training programs for servers, in preparation of the Responsible Beverage Program, Fitzgerald said in a phone interview.

Garyantes has set a good example by promoting non-alcoholic beverages, one of the Hospitality Covenant's guidelines, at the Down Under Restaurant.

The Covenant is an agreement, introduced last May by the commission, between the city and tavern owners which is aimed at curbing underage drinking, while avoiding profit loss for the proprietors.

Fitzgerald said the Covenant is the "basic foundation document for the [Responsible Beverage Service Program]."

The purpose of the celebration is to make Newark citizens aware of the program policy so they know what to expect of Covenant signers, according to Fitzgerald.

The Covenant celebration, scheduled for 4 p.m. Tuesday at Klondike Kate's, will involve the signing of a "publicity piece" covenant by the cooperating establishments, he said.

Mayor William M. Redd Jr., Gov. Michael N. Castle and university President Russel C. Jones plan to attend the event.

In other business, Council approved a three year agreement between Newark and New Castle County, which allows sharing of federal funds from the U.S. Department of

William Redd

Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

The agreement essentially permits the County to include Newark's population when applying for HUD Community Development Block Grants (CDBG).

Since funding levels are based on population, the agreement increases the amount of funds for which the County is eligible.

The Community Development Cooperation Agreement, effective July 1, 1988, will allow Newark to continue its own CDBG program by using a share of the County's CDBG funds.

Under the agreement, Newark and New Castle County will use HUD funds to implement urban renewal and publicly-assisted housing activities.

Also at the Council meeting, Redd announced the resignation of Inter-Fraternity Council President Paul LaSorsa university liable for not supervising or disciplining fraternal activities closely enough.

Sig Ep lost its charter after the incident, but regained it in 1985.

According to Schneider, the university should be held responsible for the actions of fraternities, and should take a more active role in overseeing them.

"They should not give a fraternity a charter and leave everything else to them," he added.

Schneider said he does not think the trial coverage will affect the current local Sig Ep chapter, since the fraternity was re-chartered after all involved parties graduated.

"[The trial] will cause negative publicity, but I think Sig Ep's record since 1985 speaks for itself," Schneider said. "I think the tradition that has been established for pledge programs since then is the right one. I don't foresee hazing appearing in the fraternity ever again."

The university requires that each new fraternity member sign a document agreeing not to participate in hazing activities.

Furek's lawyer in the suit is Roger Akin and the university is represented by the firm of Biggs and Battaglia. The trial is expected to last approximately two weeks.

version would not be completed on time and that they "weren't getting enough administrative support from MIS."

Hollowell could not be reached for further comment.

The consultants talked with several university vice presidents who use MIS to determine their needs, Jones said, and have been observing changes in state of the art computer technology.

Although Jones said he is very familiar with computers, he wanted assistance from experts in the field of management information systems.

"I thought with a project that big, it would be helpful to bring in somebody who was a world-class expert," he said, "and have them take a look over my shoulder and tell me how well it was going."

Vice President for Student Affairs Stuart Sharkey said he did not know whether or not the conversion will be completed on schedule.

"I really don't begin to understand or profess to understand the conversion or the complexity of it," he said. "So, I have to rely on experts either within the university or consultants to tell me whether it's on time or whether they're doing properly what I want them to do."

According to Sharkey, he and the consultants discussed admissions processing, financial aid processing and a new room assignment system for the computer.

"They were in to get my questions and issues," he explained.

George Kaludis, president of the consulting firm, said he will not comment on any findings until the report is presented to Jones.

The following proposals were unanimously approved by the Council on Student Judicial Affairs and the Vice President for Student Affairs. These proposals will become part of the Student Guide to Policies effective October 30, 1987.

The "Open Hearing Policy" currently reads:

"All hearings (original or appellate) shall be closed unless the student charged requests that it be open to members of the University community. In order to attend an open hearing, a member of the University community must inform the Assistant Dean of Students or the Administrative Coordinator at least 24 hours prior to the hearing. In the event that any person disrupts the hearing, the hearing officer or judicial body may exclude the individual and proceed with the hearing."

The change will read as follows:

"All hearings (original or appellate) shall be closed. These hearings shall be conducted as informal discussions between members of the judicial body and the accused within the procedural limits established in this document. In the event that any person disrupts the hearing, the hearing officer or judicial body may exclude the individual and proceed with the hearing."

The "Restitution Sanction" currently reads:

"Assessment of charges in an amount not in excess of damage or loss incurred. Restitution may be required with any sanction when appropriate."

The change will read as follows:

"The judicial system may assess a sanction of restitution for the damage and/or theft of University property. These charges may not be in excess of the damage or loss incurred. Restitution may be required with any sanction when appropriate."

The "Mandatory Alcohol Referral" currently reads:

"Any student who is found guilty of a second alcohol violation of the University's Code of Conduct will be referred for a mandatory evaluation session with the alcohol counselor in the Student Health Service."

The change would read as follows:

"Any student who is found guilty of a serious first offense alcohol violation or a second alcohol violation will be referred for a mandatory evaluation session with the alcohol counselor in the Student Health Center."

SPECIAL TO THE REVIEW/ Lloyd Fox

Senior ROTC member Heidi Hill was selected to become the first female pilot in Delaware and 26th in the nation.

ROTC student becomes first female pilot in state

by June Horsey

Staff Reporter

Heidi Hill rearranged her life so she could go where she has always wanted to go — to the sky — to fly, and she has become the first Delaware woman to be selected for an U.S. Air Force pilot slot.

On Sept. 18, Hill, a criminal justice major in her fifth year, was given a highly competitive pilot slot in the Air Force and on Sept. 29 she signed to serve at least eight years.

She is one of only 26 women of the 1076 total applicants chosen in the country this year, said Sgt. Nathaniel Waters, director of personnel for the Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps at the university.

Hill is also the only female to ever be selected from Delaware for an Air Force pilot slot. Only five slots were given this year to Delaware ROTC students, added Waters.

Hill, originally from Wilmington, who is very enthusiastic about the Delaware ROTC program, only recently redirected her college aims.

When Hill entered her junior year, still uncertain of her major, she decided to let her childhood dream surface.

"Ever since I was little, I wanted to be an astronaut. I just went to the Air Force [ROTC office] to see what they had to offer," Hill explained.

She decided to take the Air Force Officer Qualifying Test, which is given to assess the academic ability of the candidates.

The first time Hill took the test her scores were not competitive.

Hill said she was really only curious about traffic controlling and never thought she would qualify to be a pilot, so she was not discouraged.

But she took the test again, doubling her first score, and a third time which added an additional 20 points — making her score more competitive.

"From that point on I put everything I had into being a pilot," she said.

She immediately signed up for the beginning ROTC classes, she added.

The road to becoming a pilot in the Air Force is much more competitive for women than men, Waters said.

The reason few women are chosen is because women are not allowed to fly in combat in time of war, explained Hill.

Because of this, women must prove themselves twice, said Waters.

Before leaving for the grueling six-week summer field training camp which all pilot applicants attend, the men already know whether or not they have been chosen.

Women however, are re-evaluated after the training camp is over by a female pilot board at Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama, Waters explained.

The women who complete the six-week camp must graduate in the top half of their class, he added.

He also commented that most women either drop out before field training or fail to pass the physical.

Women must also score much higher on the initial Air Force Officer Qualifying Test, Waters said.

The second evaluation is done in the fall when the women are re-evaluated based on their grade point average, SAT scores, commander recommendations, another pilot physical and another flying test, Waters explained.

Hill said that she is now very committed to the Air Force and says she would have signed with them regardless of the results of her second re-evaluation.

Brutality of contras recounted by speaker

by Fran Battaglia

Staff Reporter

The tragic elements of the Nicaraguan conflict were depicted on both a worldly and a personal level last Thursday night by Lois Wessel, a U.S. citizen who has worked in Nicaragua since 1985.

Wessel, who spent the last three years in Central America as a health educator, is currently giving informative talks as part of the Ben Linder Peace Tour.

The lecture tour was initiated following the April 28 murder of U.S. citizen Benjamin Linder by the Contras while he was working in Nicaragua.

Wessel told the 50-member audience in Kirkbride Lecture Hall that Linder was working at a site for a new hydroelectric dam when he and two co-workers were killed by Contras. Linder was shot several times in the body before being shot at point-blank range in the head, she added.

The Cua-Bocay zone, where Linder was killed, is one of the areas hit hardest by Contras, she said, and development workers are often the targets of their attacks.

Linder's family and friends realized it was a policy that had killed him and the best way to remember Linder would be to try to change that policy, Wessel explained.

"The best way to change that policy was not to be silent," she explained, "but to talk about what's going on in Nicaragua."

According to Wessel, there have been over 100 civilians killed by Contras in the last two months.

In spite of the dangers of the location, Linder's murder has driven many Americans to go down to Nicaragua to help finish the projects Linder started, she explained. Recently, 75 U.S. citizens marched through the Cua-Bocay zone to demonstrate their refusal to be intimidated by the Contras.

"I think it's our responsibility to educate ourselves about what's going on in Nicaragua," she added. "Then people can be better informed to stop this policy that's killed over 20,000 Nicaraguans, and has also meant some serious things for the democracy of the United States."

President Reagan's proposal to give $270 million to the Contras is further incentive for action to be taken by the American people, she noted. Wessel encouraged the audience to write to their local congressman to say "no" to more aid to the Contras.

"Reagan would like us to believe that there are about 15,000 Contras, but Nicaraguan figures estimate the number to be close to 6,000," she said.

Lois Wessel

A peace plan which supports an end to the Contra funding was signed Aug. 7 by all five Central American countries and is supported by several presidents of Western Europe and numerous international organizations, said Wessel.

Wessel said that President Reagan has determined the Peace Plan to be "insignificant."

"Other Central American presidents know that the Contra war isn't getting anywhere, and the only alternative for the United States would be to have a direct invasion," she noted.

The president of Nicaragua, Daniel Ortega, was in New York last week in an effort to arrange a meeting with Reagan, Wessel said. "But Reagan is not willing to meet with him."

At a recent meeting, according to Wessel, Ortega said, "Despite the attempts of some to portray [the Contras] as moral equivalents to the founding fathers of the United States, our country cannot believe that George Washington, Thomas Jefferson or Ben Franklin could have been capable of defending the rights of the United States by committing terrorist acts."

Reagan's 1985 trade embargo on Nicaragua has made it impossible to fix most broken mechanical devices in Nicaragua, including tractors and washing machines, because the machines have U.S. parts.

Wessel said it would be almost impossible to determine the exact amount of money given to the Contras. She said there are private donations that will never be known to the public.

Wessel noted that Joseph Coors of Coors beer, had been a significant funder for the Contras. "You might want to think about that next time you order a beer," she continued.

Under the new amnesty law in Nicaragua, she said, many Contras are allowed to surrender, return to their families and receive a small plot of land while working for the community.

(PE DC) from the newly formed Town and Gown Committee.

"I am unable to serve on the Town and Gown Committee this fall. Unfortunately I have a conflicting schedule with the designated meeting time," LaSorsa said in a letter to the mayor.

Council appointed Steven Himmelfarb, public relations officer for IFC and president of Phi Kappa Tau fraternity, to replace LaSorsa. Himmelfarb was recommended for the position by La Sorsa in his letter.

The 14-member committee was formed this fall to advise City Council on matters concerning the relationship between the university and the city.

Two other students appointed to the committee Sept. 28, were Felicia Sassola (AS 88) from Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress, and Stephen Considine (AS 88) from the Off Campus Student Association.

Skater lives life on edge

by E. W. Hopkins
Staff Reporter

When Ned "Peanut" Brown received the prestigious $20,000 Pyle college scholarship in 1984, the last thing on his mind was riding a skateboard.

By 1986 he had lost the scholarship, dropped out of the University of Delaware and was on his way to becoming one of the highest-ranked amateur skateboarders in the country.

This drastic change in the direction of his life all began when he entered a local skateboarding contest, held in a drainage ditch on Route 896, while still attending the university.

Surprising himself and his competitors, he finished third out of 30 skaters.

What is even more surprising is he had not been on a skateboard in over four years.

This unexpected outcome convinced him to get back on the skateboard that he had forsaken since he was 14 years old.

"The whole thing seemed right," the 20-year-old Brown recalled. "It was suddenly the time to do it."

Brown said the hardest thing about his choice was telling his parents he planned to actively pursue skateboarding instead of college.

"I finally got up enough courage to tell my parents I didn't want to go back to school," he reflected.

To pursue his interest, he got his present job at Wooden Wheels Bicycle and Skateboard Shop on Main Street, and began his current daily routine.

"All I do is work and skate," he deadpanned.

He also re-adopted his old skating nickname, "Peanut," which, he explained, originated from the peanut shape of a "bowl" in Wilmington's now-defunct Easy Rider Skateboard Park.

Brown, who says he does not drink alcohol, take drugs or smoke, recently placed fourth out of 15 sponsored East Coast amateur skaters in a series of national qualification tournaments.

"I skated really bad," he said.

Bad or not, Brown qualified to participate in the Skateboarding Nationals, which will be held in California at the end of December.

"I came back to the sport hard and I got pretty lucky," he said modestly.

Ned "Peanut" Brown touches the sky with his unique approach to the fine art of skateboarding. Equipped with the tools of the trade — pads, gloves and helmet — he conquers gravity on the edge of a half-pipe with a "stale hand-plant" (above) and is lofted into the atmosphere with a daring "lein air" (right).

Take 5/

Satiric comedy brings 'Princess Bride' to life

by Lori Poliski

City Editor

The Princess Bride, the new film directed by Rob Reiner (This is Spinal Tap), is a fairy tale come true.

Forget all your cares and woes, it will spirit you away to a surreal fantasy world filled with shrieking eels, undying true love, giants, R.O.U.S. (Rodents of Unusual Size), and swashbuckling pirates.

Alas fair maids and charming princes, it only lasts for two hours and then you're back to the real world.

Reiner's satiric, deadpan comedy is a welcome change from the glut of thriller-romances and horror flicks that audiences have been deluged with recently. It is like watching your favorite Grimms fairy tale come alive before your eyes, but with hilarious twists. (Expect the unexpected).

Imagine Sleeping Beauty, Rapunzel, Cinderella or any of those glamour girls and a charming prince attacked in the forest, not by any generic wild animals, but by Rodents of Unusual Size. Reiner and Monty Python have the same sense of humor.

The Princess Bride is an enchanting frame story that a benevolent grandfather, played by Peter Falk of Columbo fame, tells his young grandson (Fred Savage), who stays home sick from school. The reluctant little boy is immersed in his video games and doesn't want his grandfather to read the tale of "The Princess Bride."

His grandfather promises him it has everything — fencing, fighting, torture, revenge, monsters, chases, castles, escapes and true love — and his grandfather doesn't lie.

The narration by Falk and plot move comically back and forth from the medieval, fairy-tale kingdom of Florin to the present.

Newcomer Robin Wright portrays the Princess Buttercup, (even her name is satiric) who was once a common peasant. She falls in love with Farmboy (Cary Elwes), who is really the adventuresome pirate Westley.

Buttercup and Farmboy are not the names of your typical fairy-tale lovers. There is nothing grand about falling in love with someone named Farmboy. It sounds more like "The Waltons."

Anyway, they promise true love to one another (more satire, is there really such a thing as true love?). Farmboy leaves on some quest, and Buttercup is touted as the most beautiful woman in the land. Prince Humperdinck of Florin (Chris Sarandon) wants to marry her, but of course there is always a hitch.

The best laughs are from the uproarious antics by the bumbling trio that kidnaps Buttercup. Andre the Giant gives a great performance as the dull, dum-witted Fezzik. He teams up with Vizzini, a quirky ringleader played by Wallace Shawn (My Dinner with Andre) and Inigo Montoya, a Spanish fencing expert played by Mandy Patinkin (Ragtime).

A duel between Westley and Inigo Montoya on the Cliffs of Fezzik (Andre the Giant) towers over his bumbling cohorts, Inigo Montoya (Mandy Patinkin) and Vizzini (Wallace Shawn). Insanity proves to be the film's funniest scene. They perform hilarious gymnastic stunts on tree limbs and exchange their life stories between deadly jabs.

Billy Crystal is wonderful as Miracle Max, a wizened old wizard. He has some off-beat one liners that Merlin would never have conjured up. The most refreshing thing about The Princess Bride is that all the medieval characters look like they belong in this ethereal fairy tale, but talk like they are in a Woody Allen film.

And everyone lives happily ever after.

Bruce is back, with melancholy image and sound

by Don Gordon

Administrative News Editor

Listening to Bruce Springsteen's new album, Tunnel of Love, is a bit like eating a TV dinner. That is, it tastes good but doesn't have much in the way of nutrition.

Those expecting a repeat of Bruce's last studio album, the disco-ish, rock-ish Born in the U.S.A., will be surprised.

Somewhere along the line, Bruce underwent a major shift in theme and style. In both areas he has, to use a much-too-used expression, returned to his roots.

Thematically, Bruce has remained political in a quirky kind of way. He looks at politics, but only as far as it affects individuals and concerns everyday life. Much like John Cougar Mellencamp, this viewpoint explains Bruce's nostalgic obsession with small-town values, lifestyles, etc.

But while this album can be construed as indirectly political, it is much more an intensely personal statement.

Bruce is now a married man, so that's where his head is at. But he is still pleasantly plagued by self-doubts and limitations.

In terms of sound, Tunnel of Love is closer to country than rock. It's sparse, kind of hollow, with an organ and acoustic guitar as the cohesive elements.

Bruce's voice lends itself well to that sound, and he relies on his voice as the main instrument on most songs. But even if you don't like his voice, on these songs it's tough to doubt his sincerity.

It's exhilarating to hear a mainly acoustic album. For the most part, the E Street Band is absent as a back-up (with the exception of the extremely boring drumming of Max Weinberg), but that's OK. It just means the focus is shifted to Bruce, who seems determined to convince everyone that fame and money haven't changed him, that he's still a lonely guy who

TUNNEL OF LOVE

Bruce Springsteen's latest album, Tunnel of Love, shows the mellow and moody sides of The Boss. The LP, unlike the multiplatinum Born in the U.S.A., has a distinctive country flavor.

...skater lives life on the edge of the sky

Brown's event is "vertical skating," during which he skates inside a huge U-shaped half-pipe ramp, often leaving the top of the structure to perform acrobatic stunts.

He has invented a self-styled move called the 'Alley Oop Eggplant,' which involves an upside-down hand-slide along 10 feet of the edge of the ramp. "It's not a hobby," Brown stated. "It's a sport."

He explained he wanted to become professional as soon as he started skating again.

"I was pretty close, a long time ago," he said, "but it didn't work out then."

"Once I got going again I wanted to really give it a better shot."

In September of 1986, Brown placed fifth at a national contest held in Chicago. Nine major skateboard companies decided to sponsor him immediately after the contest — all of whom will eventually have him on salary if he turns professional.

"That was my first major success," he recalled. "I was in both major magazines, Skateboarder and Transworld, with my name and picture, which is important because everybody in the industry reads them."

He made it to the nationals last year, but was disappointed when he finished 13th.

"I knocked myself out of the event by falling," he explained.

Brown is looking to a future filled with more than just riding skateboards, though.

"I'm definitely going back to college in the near future," he projected. "once I make enough money from skating to pay for it."

"I think you should take the time out to do what you really want to while you still can," he commented.

If all goes well, 1987 will be his first year as a professional, and 1988 will be his first year making big money.

"My only advice to people would be to do what you really have to — and don't go along with what other people think you should do," Brown stressed.

"The fact that I've got a chance to turn pro, which is every kid's dream when they start skating, is the biggest high in my life — even though it is an uncertain future."

...Bruce is back with a melancholy sound

wears faded jeans and drives an old pick-up. Hell, for all I know he wakes up at 4 a.m. to feed the goats.

On "Ain't Got You," he sings: "Well I got all the riches baby any man ever knew/But the only thing I ain't got honey I ain't got you."

He sounds like he means it. But the whole album is still very contrived, from the don't-leave-me-alone-tonight lyrics right down to the Annie Leibovitz liner photo of Bruce in overalls with one strap down, holding an acoustic guitar. Basically, Bruce has come up with a consummately yuppie album.

A dear friend suggested that he is pulling a Steve Winwood, trying to get the older crowd. True in part, but Bruce's inclination toward softness of sound and intent may also be a signal of maturation. After all, his brow is furrowed in all three album photos.

The first single, "Brilliant Disguise," is characteristic of most of the songs. The sound is likable, the lyrics are self-examining.

The whole album is self-centered — which would be OK if he wasn't so straightforward about it. Bruce's metaphors are kind of shallow; it would help if he read a book or two. A performer can rely on natural talent for a while, but eventually he will stop progressing.

The first song on the second side, "Tunnel of Love," is the most rocking on the album, and one of the best. After a sparse, stripped-down first side, guitarist Nils Lofgren is electrifying. The synthesizers are unnecessary — they take away from the song, give it a disco feel that doesn't belong.

"One Step Up" is the most likable song on the album, and the one I like the best. The lyrics are painfully simple, the singing honest: "When I look at myself I don't see/The man

I wanted to be/Somewhere along the line I slipped off track/I'm caught movin' one step up and two steps back."

Overall, the album has a nice feel to it, like your hand in the pocket of your oldest jeans. Bruce seems disillusioned but always bemused — it's tough to tell how seriously he takes himself and his problems.

He's no Dylan, but Bruce does have a way with words. On "Valentine's Day" he sings, sadly, "Is it the sound of the leaves/Left blown by the wayside/That's got me out here on this spooky old highway tonight."

"I had fallen in love..."

...with words."

Tennis

The women's tennis team, coming off their first East Coast Conference championship ever this weekend, lost 6-2, to Temple University Tuesday at the Field House.

Amy Beamer won her match at No. 5 singles for the Hens (9-3 overall, 4-1 in the ECC) and the No. 1 doubles team of Laura LeRoy and Chrissy Ellis were also winners.

Delaware Coach B.J. Ferguson explained that although the team was "mentally and physically spent," from the weekend's competition, she was pleased with their performance.

Cross Country

The Delaware men's cross country team finished second overall in an East Coast Conference meet Saturday against Bucknell, Drexel and Lafayette.

"We ran well," coach Jim Fischer said. "It was the best meet of the year."

Delaware (2-6 overall, 2-1 in the ECC) had five runners in the top 20, with two finishing in the top five. Jim Chenoweth led the Hens, finishing third with a time of 26:41 and Pat Castagno finished fourth (26:44).

pitching. Jack Morris was always good for eight innings, and kept me from overworking my less-than-perfect bullpen. California right-hander Kirk McCaskill, St. Louis lefty Ricky Horton, and knuckleballer-gopherballer Charlie Hough rounded out my top four.

So far, they haven't really let me down. I have to scrounge around for runs — I'm not a "three-run homer" manager like Earl Weaver. I'm one game under .500, and my team MVP looks like left fielder Kevin Bass.

Of course, if you don't want to draft, order a set of 1975 cards and replay the thrilling Red Sox-Reds Fall Classic.

Better still, try to put yourself in Bosox manager John Macnamara's shoes in game six of last year's series (hint — think about a defensive replacement for Bill Buckner at about the tenth inning). This is real second-guessing, baseball like it oughta be.

And we love it.

Until now, beer this real came only from a keg.

Draft beer is as real as beer gets. Since it's not heat-pasteurized, heat can't change its rich, smooth, real taste.

Miller Genuine Draft is as real as that. It's not heat-pasteurized like most other beers in bottles and cans. Instead, it's cold-filtered so it's as rich and smooth as only real draft beer can be.

As real as it gets.

Hardly a trivial pursuit

For as long as I can remember, I've loved baseball.

From driveway whiffleball with my brothers, to collecting stacks of baseball cards, to sitting here watching the Cardinals take a 4-0 lead into the fifth in the seventh game of the National League Championship Series, I've always stood in awe of the Major Leagues.

But there's a difference between what baseball means to me now and what it meant to me then.

Back then, all players were giving 110 per cent at all times. Back then, managers were just really hard baseball cards to get.

Back then, baseball players were adults, and I was a kid.

Now, I've joined the elite mass of one-time kids that knows that baseball is more than just a game. It's a thought process.

Instead of just accepting a loss, a pitching change or a caught steal, we question every move, demand to know why and criticize our heroes.

We wanna' be managers.

Just this fall, as the pennant races were heating up, a group of friends and I got a hold of Pursue the Pennant, the most realistic baseball board game ever created.

In PTP, we play the role of Major League managers. The game, which costs about $35, includes highly detailed statistic cards for every player and every stadium in the Major Leagues. Every one.

By matching any hitter and any pitcher in the game, a series of 10-sided dice rolls will predict the actual probability of that at-bat.

It's true. And it's real, so real.

So real that LaMarr Hoyt can get caught with illegal substances following the game, and suspended by the league president.

So real, that if you decide to play at Wrigley Field, you roll for wind conditions. You can get rained out. Players argue with umpires and get ejected. Players suffer injuries. You can try for the hit-and-run. The bunt-and-run. The sacrifice bunt. The straight steal.

Players' defensive abilities at each position are accounted for. Pitchers can be tough in the jam, hitters tough in the clutch. Oh, so real.

So what the 11 of us did was form a PTP league, with a real draft and everything. See, we couldn't just take the 1986 clubs as they were, the Mets would crush everyone. And at least two of us wanted the Mets.

So we compromised, and drew players out of a hat by position. As fate would have it, I didn't end up with a 1986 Mets squad. A 1981 Mets squad, maybe, but not '86.

It just made my challenge as manager harder. With such superstars as Mike Scioscia, Darnell Coles, and Rafael Santana, it's the manager who will win ball games.

My strong suit, as it turned out, was starting campaign. And then Domnick, again.

Delaware 6, Lehigh 1. The scoring was contagious.

Rosenbaum was not to be denied. She knocked in her eighth score of the year to stretch the Hens' lead to seven.

The junior had achieved a feat that hadn't been done since 1983 — the hat trick. Three goals in a game. All-America Anne Wilkinson was the last Hen to do so.

Freshman Jill Hershey joined in the fun as she rubbed the salt in the Engineers' wounds, scoring her first varsity goal with six minutes remaining.

"It felt really good," Hershey said, "but it would've been pretty bad if I didn't score because the goalie wasn't even in the cage."

Lehigh scored a goal with about 30 seconds left to make it 8-2, but it was academic.

It was the kind of game Delaware needed after the disappointing win over Towson State University last week.

"It was a fun and relaxing game," junior co-captain Nari Bush said.

Any team would have fun if they scored eight goals in a game. But the Hens have to make sure they don't relax too much. Tuesday's Lehigh game was only the battle. The war looms in the distance.

Hens, Tribe face same problems

Teams battle inexperience at key offensive spots

by Jeff James

Sports Editor

Last season, quarterback Ken Lambiotte and tailback Michael Clemons provided the one-two punch for William & Mary as they decked Delaware, 24-18, at Delaware Stadium.

Lambiotte completed 22 of 36 passes for 288 yards, and Clemons (the nation's leading all-purpose back) ran over, through and under the Hens' defense for 103 yards.

Together, the two had a hand in all three of the Tribe's TDs.

But both are missing from this year's offense, leaving inexperienced players in their place.

Sound familiar?

It should.

In the same game, Delaware's Rich Gannon threw for 229 yards, and halfback Bob Norris scored twice — once on an 80-yard punt return.

Norris has since graduated and — unless you just returned from Gilligan's Island — you know where Gannon went.

So tomorrow's non-conference meeting between the Hens (2-3 overall, 1-3 in the Yankee Conference) and William & Mary at Cary Stadium will feature two teams with very different looks from a year ago.

"We're a very different football team without people like Ken Lambiotte, Michael Clemons and some of the guys that have been playing for us for quite some time," said William & Mary coach Jimmie Laycock. "We've been kind of up and down this year, but I've been pleased with some of the people offensively."

William & Mary (2-3) found a formidable replacement for Lambiotte in John Brosnahan. The junior, who was a split end until this season, has completed 62.8 percent of his passes and is the No. 4-rated passer in all of Division I-AA.

"I thought they had a hole at quarterback," Delaware coach Tubby Raymond said, "but Brosnahan has responded... he's a fine player."

The Tribe didn't do as well at tailback, but that was to be expected. As Laycock put it, "we don't have anybody who compares to Clemons."

William & Mary's running game hasn't exactly been scaring opposing defenses off the field. And if the Tribe is smart, it won't try its luck too much against the Hens' run defense — led by Darrell Booker.

Sophomore Erick Elliot leads William & Mary in rushing with 189 yards (he's really tearing up the defenses) on the ground, while Eddie Davis had his best career performance last week against Yale, gaining 97 yards.

The Tribe's defense has had its troubles defending the run and if Delaware can get a good performance from one of its backs, they could run William & Mary right out of Williamsburg.

"I think defensively, we're still very sporadic and we're looking for something to give us a consistent performance that we need," Laycock said.

The key to shutting down William & Mary's offense is stopping Brosnahan from having a field day. If the Hens can keep the damage he does to a minimum,

There was an explosion at Delaware Field on Tuesday. An offensive explosion, that is.

The Delaware field hockey squad moved its overall record to 8-1-2 (3-0 in the East Coast Conference) as they dropped a second-half bomb of seven unanswered goals on defending ECC champion Lehigh (5-8 overall, 4-1 ECC) for an 8-2 victory.

It was an especially sweet win for the Hens. Not only because they fell victim to the Engineers, 1-0, in last year's ECC Championship game, but because it marked head coach Mary Ann Hitchens' 175th career victory.

"I didn't know anything about [the milestone] until I saw it in the program today," Hitchens said.

Hitchens, who has posted a 175-70-27 record in 15 seasons at Delaware, kept everything in perspective.

"It feels good," she said, "but I don't count any of [the victories] as mine."

"In all the milestones along the way I've always said that I don't win the games, the players do."

However, it's hard to believe that the Hens would be as successful as they are without Hitchens.

Tuesday's game would attest to that.

Delaware scored early in the first half on a goal by junior Lynn Iannotta, but Lehigh's Carol Gibson tied the game minutes later.

The half ended in a 1-1 deadlock.

Hitchens' half time pep talk must have done the trick.

The Hens came out for the second half with the heavy arsenal. The offensive barrage was underway.

Delaware's Michele Rosenbaum had a goal disallowed early, but made the best of a second chance when she scored her sixth goal of the season on a perfect assist from Iannotta.

The Hens led, 2-1.

Two minutes later, Laura Domnick snuck behind the Engineer defense to score her elusive fifth goal of the year.

"It felt good to score again," Domnick said. "I think the ice is broken now."

Less than a minute later, Rosenbaum struck again, giving Delaware a 4-1 lead.

Everyone got into the act. Senior Karlyn Wesley scored her first goal of the
