Full-scale investigation announced

Minority-recruitment policy is subject of inquiry

by Sharon O'Neal Assistant News Editor

DOVER — The Delaware State Human Relations Commission voted unanimously Thursday to conduct a full-scale investigation of the university's minority affairs and faculty and administrative hiring practices.

Rabbi Peter H. Grumbacher, the commission chairman, said in a statement, "While there may be certain fields in which the number of eligible and available candidates to fill tenure-track positions is small, there is reason to believe that only certain colleges and departments of the University of Delaware make the effort to recruit, hire and promote qualified minority members and women."

"Others may either ignore their availability or perhaps consciously not pursue them."

The investigation will begin "almost immediately," Grumbacher said.

The decision to conduct an investigation follows a preliminary inquiry the commission began in January. It was conducted at the request of State Rep. Al O. Plant, D-

Wilmington

Grumbacher said he and Andrew Turner, the commission director, conducted interviews with "a number of persons connected with the university.

"We are concerned about the status of affirmative action on the campus: the mandate of affirmative action officers over the years by the university administration and the commitment of the university in gener-

"There were numerous contradictions which we believe warrant further investigation in this regard," Grumbacher added.

Although Turner said the official manner in which the investign are will be conducted has not yet been formalized,

State theater facade altered

by Sharon O'Neal
Assistant News Editor

The marquee of Main Street's State Theatre was dismantled Sunday due to its run-down condition, rendering it unsafe to passers-by, according to Robert Teeven Sr., the theater's owner.

"I was afraid it would hurt somebody [if it fell]," Teeven said Sunday.

He indicated the marquee was loosened by a recent ice storm. "[The removal] was a safety precaution," he added.

The upper section of the marquee, reading "The State," was removed prior to the dismantling of the rest of the structure and was donated to the Newark Historical Society, Teeven said.

Teeven announced his plans last fall to demolish the theater because the cost of renovation would be too great.

Although Teeven said the dismantling of the marquee was not the first step in the destruction of the entire building, he said his plans to tear it down have not changed.

Bob Thomas, one of the workmen who dismantled the marquee, said the job started at about 6 a.m. Sunday and was not completed as of 1:30 p.m.

"It was a lot better made than we thought it was," Thomas said. The men used a sledgehammer to tear the structure down, and the remains were left in a pile in the lot next to the theater.

Teeven indicated the cost of repairing the marquee would have made keeping it too costly, and insurance purposes required him to have it removed.

Although the building is on the National Registry of Historic Places, Teeven said there are no related regulations preventing the

Hiring freeze implemented by president

by Mark Nardone Administrative News Editor

Because university expenditures currently exceed annual income, President E.A. Trabant has initiated a freeze on hiring salaried and professional staff to call attention to the problem.

In a memorandum dated March 6, Trabant said: "The financial picture: i.e. income vs. expenditures, for 1989-90 is uncertain. Until there is a clearer understanding of the university finances, a hiring freeze is instituted for non-faculty positions. This action includes those positions for which individuals are currently being recruited.

"We have a problem," Trabant said Friday. "We're currently spending more than we are bringing in. We budgeted to take from reserves $6 million more than we're going to put in."

Trabant estimated the freeze would have a "net cash effect" between $300,000 and $500,000. He said the university will be $6 million poorer at the end of fiscal 1989.

Pulling funds from reserves means "the budget is operating in the red." Current reserves total about $30 million. Trabant explained that although income has risen by an average of 11.6 percent over the last five years, expenditures are up 14.6 percent.

"That can't go on without going broke," he said. "That is just unhealthy.

"The only way I thought would bring attention to the problem," Trabant said, "to help solve it, would be to have a hiring freeze."

The university will try to curb spending of reserve funds as much as possible in this operating year and the next, Trabant said.

He described reserve funds as continued to page 14

Residence changes to avoid crowding, extended housing

by Ellen Ginsburg
Staff Reporter

Most extended housing students find themselves living too close for comfort.

However at least a few of them may be able to get more liveable surroundings next year.

Previously unavailable areas in Camon and Brown halls may be available for extended housing students next year, Linda Carey, assistant director of the Office of Housing and Residence Life, said Friday.

Supply rooms in Cannon -Hall's basement may be renovated into dorm rooms.

Carey said the basement is a possibility for mid-fall or the spring of next year.

"There's no way we could get that area ready by the beginning of school next year," Carey said. She explained that a great deal of renovation and rebuilding is needed. She also said ceilings will have to be dropped and new walls put in.

Carey and her supervisor, Barbara Rexwinkel, associate director of Housing and Residence Life, are meeting to pursue the possibility, Carey said.

Office space in Brown Hall is a stronger possibility for a place to house students. This space may be available at the beginning of the year, Carey said.

Housing and Residence Life staff who have offices on the first floor of Brown are moving to 405 Academy St.

Two large offices in Brown are connected by a smaller area. Carey said the office space may be used as a large room or as an apartment. The bathroom across from the offices is small, and if a shower can be put in, the office space will serve as an apartment.

Wardrobes would be needed because there are no closets in the office space, Carey said.

"Brown looks more feasible [than Cannon]," she said. She also said at least four students could live comfortably in the space and possibly more than four.

"It would certainly be a very nice area for students, certainly a popular one," Carey said.

Police raid house; seize drugs, cash

by Ted Spiker Administrative News Editor

Two Newark residents were arrested and charged with various drug violations after three police agencies and one federal agency raided a Newark residence Thursday morning.

Timothy Edwards, 33, and his wife Mary M. Edwards, 33, of the 300 block of Phillips Avenue, were arrested in the raid that led to the confiscation of about $10,000 worth of drugs, Newark Police said.

Police said both were charged with trafficking cocaine and PCP and possession with intent to deliver marijuana and amphetamines.

They were also charged with possession of hypodermic syringes and drug paraphernalia, possession of a deadly weapon while committing a felony, maintaining a dwelling for drugs and second-degree conspiracy.

The Edwards are being held at Gander Hill Prison for arraignment with bond set at $97,000 each. They face a mandatory minimum three-year prison sentence for the trafficking charges, police said.

The residence was raided by Newark Police, University Police, State Police and the Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms [ATF] agency.

Settlement reached in Rosa's dispute

by Heather McMurtrie Copy Editor

A settlement was reached between the owner of Rosa's Restaurant and the building's tenant after a dispute that delayed the university's building plans for four months, a university official said Monday.

The dispute was slowing the university's plans to demolish Rosa's and three other buildings on Academy Street and Main Street.

The university agreed with the landlord, Joseph Cohen, to buy the buildings in September.

Wallace N. Nagle Jr., associate treasurer of Finance, said Monday, "The university will own the property at the end of the month."

Nagle said he does not know when construction will begin because the board of trustees must approve the project.

The dispute arose out of a difference as to when the owner of Rosa's, David Bolen, should vacate the building.

Cohen was out of town Monday and could not reached for comment about settlement details.

Clifford Hearn, Cohen's lawyer, refused comment

Monday.

The case was heard on Feb. 28 and the judge, Chancellor William T. Allen, gave Bolen and Cohen two options — to reach a settlement between themselves within 10 days and submit a statement to the court, or enter a post-trial brief.

Seminar on AIDS forewarns disease can happen to you

by Susan Dietz Staff Reporter

When most students think of AIDS, they think it's not their problem, that it can't happen to them. A national expert on AIDS education, however, warned a campus audience Thursday that it can.

"It can, but it doesn't have to," was the primary message delivered by Dr. Richard Keeling, president of the American College Health Association.

AIDS is very much a reality on college campuses and can only be prevented through knowledge, Keeling explained.

"As we wait 15 years for a prevention by vaccine, we will depend on an equally powerful strategy — education," he said during the "Just Say 'Know' to AIDS" program sponsored by Wellspring.

As education continues, people will learn how to change their behavior to reduce the risks of infection, Keeling said.

Three out of every 1,000 college students may currently be infected with the HIV virus, according to Keeling.

He said in terms of a campus this size, 50 to 55 students could be infected with the virus, while four to five students will show symptoms and one to two will actually have AIDS.

"But when AIDS comes to campus, this one [campus] or any other one, it will not come as a statistic," he said. "It will walk with a face and a name."

The main problem is that students do not see the disease affecting people like them, Keeling said.

Because the disease takes eight years to develop, he said, people who contracted the virus early in high school will not show symptoms until after graduation.

Richard Keeling

According to a 1988 Oregon State University study on AIDS knowledge and behavior, 60 percent of the 450 students surveyed said they had had sex the previous year without using a condom.

Most of those students could answer basic questions about AIDS but demonstrated no sense of being at risk.

"If the HIV virus was put into a group on campus, it would spread very easily," Keeling said.

Record retention continues to keep archives updated

by Mary Ellen Colpo Copy Editor

A request made in December to temporarily suspend the disposal of search/recruitment-related records is in effect, in an attempt to provide more efficient records on hiring procedures, Jean K. Brown, director of Records Management, said Thursday.

"So many affirmative action issues [have been raised] on campus in the past six months that the university thought it would be a good idea to keep all records," Brown said.

G. Arno Loessner, vice president for University Advancement, implemented the short-term retention policy of search/recruitment-related records and said all university departments are required to comply.

When the university is satisfied that searches to fill several university offices have been successfully completed, the board of trustees and legal counsel will be consulted before the regular retention policy will be reinstated, he said.

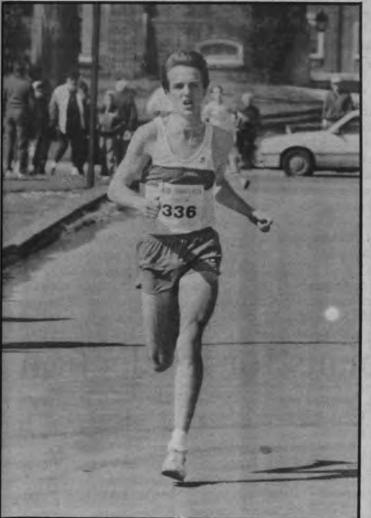

Brown said the federal government requires records to be kept for two years, but the university generally keeps them for three "Presently, records are being kept across-the-board of all applications for vacant salaried positions at the university," Brown said.

Loessner explained with the hiring of new people to fill the positions of university president, affirmative action officer and vice president of Employee Relations, the number of people asking about affirmative action policies has increased.

WXDR, the university's radio station, is holding its annual radiothon this week to raise money to pay the operating expenses of the station.

The station hopes to raise $25,000, according to Station Manager Chuck Tarver.

In the past, money from the radiothon has been used to purchase new equipment, conduct studies and refurbish the news

One-third of the budget comes from listener support, Tarver said.

The area surrounding Daugherty Hall has been selected as a prospective sight for a new student center, a university official said Friday.

Vice President for Government Relations John T. Brook said the area around Daugherty is a good location which is centered around student life.

"We are looking at a new student center to make up for some of the inadequacies we have now," Brook said. "Daugherty is a substantial building which has not been well utilized up to this point."

Brook said the idea of a student center is in a complicated planning process, which is just getting underway.

Dean of Students Timothy F. Brooks said, "If all plans go well and we can acquire appropriate funding, we could have a new student center in three to five years."

Senior Vice President for Administration David E. Hollowell said there have been several discussions among administrators about the location of a new student center.

"Daugherty Hall is a very central location," Hollowell said. "Other considerations have been made to add on to the existing student center."

Brooks described a new center would be twice the size of the current one and more orientated toward student activities.

"Initial interviews with students and Brooks said he envisions a large facility with many meeting rooms. A food court resembling the court at Christiana Mall is being considered, along with large programming space for a theater and concerts.

"We would retain the current student center," he said. "Some pieces may be moved to provide additional space where needed.

"An architectural firm has been commissioned to investigate the building and all the uses that would be appropriate," he added. "There are a million ideas floating around and nothing is definite."

Mike Claricurzio (AG 92) said he feels a new student center would provide more space for student organizations.

"I think it would relieve some of the overcrowding that exists at the current student center," he said.

Wilmington's St. Patrick's parade

City's 14th annual parade highlights a day of excitement

by Wendy Pickering
Staff Reporter

By golly, I think I see a leprechaun!

So did hundreds of Delaware residents when they came to Wilmington Saturday to "paint the town green" for the 14th annual St. Patrick's Day parade.

The parade was sponsored by the Irish Culture Club of Delaware.

The streets were lined with bright sunshine, Irishmen and non-Irishmen of all ages, wearing the traditional green St. Patrick's Day garb.

They came to celebrate the feast day of St. Patrick and their Irish heritage, said Rev. James Trainer of St. Patrick's Church in Wilmington.

The Mistress of Ceremonies, Annamay Claffey, opened the parade with "ceád milé failte," a Gaelic greeting meaning "100,000 welcomes."

The parade included everything from clowns to leprechauns to politicians.

Among the dignitaries in attendance were Sen. Joseph Biden, Lt. Gov. Dale Wolf, State Rep. Thomas Carper and Mayor Daniel S. Frawley.

Several area high schools were represented in the annual band competition, with William Penn taking first place.

Highlights of the parade differed for everyone.

Music from bagpipes and mummers entertained the crowd

The children seemed to enjoy the festivities most, as they enthusiastically waved green shakers at a green dragon that danced down King Street.

James Cook, 9, of Wilmington, proudly sporting his colors and bow tie, yelled his approval at the passing floats.

"Hey, I'm Irish," Cook yelled to one attraction.

The McAleer dancers of Newark agreed they would rather dance in the parade than watch.

However, the fun was not limited to the young ones.

Joe McLaughlin, 41, of Wilmington pondered over his favorite part of the parade.

"The beginning and the end," he said.

Joe Schofield, 59, of Wilmington marched the entire parade route with his mother, Sabina Clarke Schofield, 90.

"It's a great day for the Irish," Schofield said.

"I was very proud to be in the parade and I'm very proud of [my mother]," he added.

Cook summed up the sentiment of the day when asked what he plans to do for St. Patrick's Day on March 17.

"I'm gonna wear green and I'm going to have fun," he said.

The story of Saint Patrick, Ireland's famous bishop

by Audra Weintraub
Staff Reporter

Erin Go Braugh, and top o' the mornin' to ya!

St. Patrick's Day is Ireland's national holiday, celebrated on March 17 by those of Irish decent all over the world.

The holiday is in honor of St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland

St. Patrick's Day is a religious holiday in Ireland, but in the United States it is non-religious, celebrated in cities with large numbers of Irish decendants.

St. Patrick is remembered by special services, community gatherings and parades, wearing green clothing, and of course, shamrocks.

The shamrock originated from the Irish word trefoil, meaning three-leafed. St. Patrick planted the tree in Ireland because three small leaflets represent the Holy Trinity.

St. Patrick was a missionary to Ireland in the A.D. 400s who converted the Irish to Christianity. He was a bishop and a missionary.

At 16, St. Patrick was captured and sold into slavery in Ireland. He escaped after six years but returned at age 22—determined to convert the Irish to Christianity.

He was rejected as bishop at first, but was later ordained a bishop, and set out for Ireland.

The first St. Patrick's Day parade was held in Boston in 1737, and the largest parade today is held in New York City.

For the past 14 years, the Irish Club of Delaware sponsors a parade in Wilmington in celebration of St. Patrick's Day.

Each year the parade includes a variety of bands, food and beverages. It also includes a service at St. Patrick's Church.

Following the parade are parties, where people can buy many Irish tokens in order to celebrate the holiday.

Curtain Call

Play it, Bob.

The sound you heard on Main Street this weekend was a fabricated steel curtain crashing down at the end of a final show.

The dismantling of the State Theatre's marquee was a harsh dose of reality — a bleary-eyed young-ster thrust out into the afternoon glare following an escapist matinee.

A piece of Newark, the epitome of Main Street's character is waiting to join the Deluxe Luncheonette in some anonymous pile of rubble.

Robert Teeven Sr., the Donald Trump of Newark, has marked the State for eradication. Hundreds of citizens and students have felt the nausea associated with confronting big money — a gut wrenching powerlessness.

We admire those who continue to display their concern for the State. We can only hope that the man with the deed hears our plea.

Perhaps if Mr. Teeven is as concerned with the city as he says he is, he would seriously consider giving something back — the neo-classical character of the State.

We understand the constraints of business, yet we also have a vague idea of the size of Mr. Teeven's portfolio.

Returning the State Theatre to its starring role — that of a theater — would cast Robert Teeven Sr. as one of Delaware's all-time heroes.

The bulldozer begets only villains. Who are you playing for, Bob?

The state probe into affirmative action policies should be looked at as an opportunity to correct any hiring inequities at the university.

We may not like what we see — a picture of cloudy hiring practices that materialized during the Jones administration, but were undoubtedly present long before the boys from Boston came to town.

Fortunately, the probe will give the trustees and administration an opportunity to correct the picture and ensure that such scrutiny will not be required in the future.

A Moronic State

Several months ago I quizzed some friends on a map of the United States and the countries of Western Europe. Not one of the 30 I asked could get all the names of the states or countries.

Some couldn't even pick half the states in America and most didn't get any European countries except England.

Pretty sad for a group of people apparently smart enough to get into this institution.

In 1984, a survey of Americans revealed that 40 percent of those polled couldn't identify George Bush as the country's vice president.

That's depressing when you figure most of them could probably describe the texture of Doc Severenson's jacket on the last seven Tonight Shows.

"Sort of herringbonish with a hint of tweed," one moronic couch potato might respond. "The two states immediately west of Illinois, that's easy. Indiana and Wisconsin, right?"

Wrong.

Geography lesson aside, the fact remains that America has the worst educational system in the world among developed countries — and things look to be getting worse.

Our society becomes more visual every day with the sit-and-vegetate-until-you-grow-roots attitude becoming the norm for most American families. Books are nothing more than a prop for the back door on windy days while the television is the idolized god of most living rooms.

This visually dominated life style, centered around the almighty channel changer, is turning our youth into educational misfits and bodes a greater ignorance for future corporate heads and national leaders.

But it isn't only the tube that's putting us years behind countries like Japan in education. Former President Ronald Reagan stuck it to education during his eight years in office — opting for a future based on smart missiles, not people.

His cuts in education prevented prospective college students from getting the aid they needed. And some of those already enrolled were sent packing on a temporary trip to the local gas station to regroup their funds.

"Would you like me to check your oil too, Mr. President?"

What is it going to take for this country to realize it must begin keeping up with the educational schemes of other countries. Many European and Asian countries send their kids to school six days a week. While the children of the next generation might not cherish the thought of giving up Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles on Saturday mornings, there may be no other choice.

The United States needs to begin offering a quality education to everyone — not just the Seths and Muffys of the monetarily elite. This will only start when we begin giving grade-school and high-school teachers the pay equivalent to the importance of their profession.

It doesn't seem too hard to understand, the smarter the people in a society, the more productive the output of those people.

Unless the government makes a commitment to better education — which seems highly unlikely — we will be destined to a future group of leaders who will get together to compare soap notes.

Earth shattering indeed.

By the way, the two states immediately west of Illinois are Iowa and Missouri.

Newark Straight Edgers not so straight

The insert in last Tuesday's Review contained an article on Straight Edge, a group of moral-minded "alternative" types.

Abstinence from drugs, alcohol, smoking and casual sex is a good idea. It will probably prolong life for a few years not to mention save money.

A rather large and ever-expanding group of Straight Edges in the Newark area has reared its head of late. Some, not all, have been showing their faces at student parties and even the dining halls. Not such a big deal, except for the aftermath of their visits. As a Newark resident and occasional party host, it is appalling to find such "moral" people tearing down bathroom doors, defecating on the floor and putting stickers everywhere.

Reader is tired of sticker shtick

The article on the proposed parking garage has left me angry all over again. University officials have again agreed to do nothing and hope the problem goes away. When I first came here, I got one of the red stickers that basically entitles you to park in Maryland and take the bus here. My goal was to get a blue sticker. So, I get the blue sticker, and suddenly the blue lots are pushed back with the red ones. I finally get a gold sticker, and what happens? A new building goes up in the middle of Russell lot, and half of what remains is suddenly converted to a pay lot. Everywhere else, the reserved spots have suddenly cropped up denying gold stickers adequate parking again. To add insult to injury, you actually pay $80 for the right to be deprived a parking space!!

As it stands now, a student can basically park in Wilmington and walk for all the good a parking sticker does.

Yes, we have a radio station

Once again I am surprised and disappointed by the level of apathy which surrounds this campus. On the evening of March 6, WXDR received many calls concerning the inclement weather, and consequently, if school would be cancelled for the following day. Since we hadn't received any word from the university about cancellation, we told the callers to stay tuned and that we would relay to them any information we received about the situation. What irked me (if I may use Mr. Kerschbaumer's expression), was that more than half of the callers had to ask at what frequency WXDR is located.

All of the university's clubs and organizations are affected by this lack of interest. With tuition rates constantly rising, it makes sense to get the most for your money, and experience everything the university has to offer, doesn't it?

Salaried staffer appreciates support

Sometimes it seems to those of us who are "in the trenches" (in sports parlance) as if we are but the buffer zone between irrepressible forces: student demands on the one hand and faculty/administrators on the other. Stress surveys consistently put non-professional positions at the top of the list of high-stress occupations. As you said, "the state is riding a wave of prosperity" which should be shared by all. Many of us do indeed "detect a certain inequity."

Thanks again for your support. Perhaps our bachelor governor should take a few lessons from some of the students here at the university.

What's Goin' On

Once again, boys and girls, it's time to take a good hard look at our values, our country and our politics. We are on the verge of the 1990s, 10 years away from the year 2000, and American society has taken a giant step backwards — at least 25 to 50 years backwards.

And we all missed the party that celebrated the fact, the biggest since the Emancipation Proclamation. I guess no one heard about it. Hard to believe on this campus.

The Aryan Woodstock happened two Saturdays ago in the tranquil Napa Valley of California. Over 2,000, uh, people were invited. Sounds like fun, huh? Highly unlikely, unless you sympathize with skinheads.

Now when I think of

Napa

Mark Nardone

Napa Valley, I'm inclined to associate it with the fruit of the grape, not a bunch of young fruit loops with shaved pates who bear swastikas. Yet these recidivists have pervaded every strata of the good of U.S.A., and most of us are unaware.

These mental midgets believe in an antiquated notion known as white supremacy. They like violence and drugs. When they're not bangin' heads with each other at self-styled Woodstocks, they're bangin' the heads of defenseless people on the streets. And they are led by one Tom Metzger, a.k.a, the KKK's former Grand Dragon.

Metzger is, very simply, a sick man. A mildly affluent television repairman from Southern California, he wields an above average degree of power in his area. He is Hitler incarnate, and to prove it he named his "movement" WAR, short for White Aryan Resistance.

O ye of little blonde and blue pigment, beware! He wants your ass swingin' from a tree. WAR is nothing less than a thinly-veiled Klan for the coffee generation. They prefer nazi uniforms over white hoods and are partial to swastikas rather than burning crosses. But their hatred burns with a blue flame. They don't particularly enjoy the company of Jews, Catholics or any of a number of racial groups — especially blacks. They've labeled themselves conservatives. They think they are exemplary Americans and their legion is growing quite rapidly. But back to the party —

It was supposed to be a concert. Metzger invites all his lower-than-whale-shit followers and some bands that scream some notoriously neo-Nazi lyrics. He warns "race mixers" to stay home. He offers a door prize, rumored to be an AK-47 assault rifle — an indispensible household item for every upstanding American. But it back-fired.

Anyone who has ever attended a concert knows how inhibitions tend to dissipate as emotions red-line. Imagine that at an event sponsored for some of the most hate-filled individuals in the country. It's scary, to say the least.

Good for Napa officials who had the foresight to realize the potential for violence. I don't think I'm exaggerating when I say that it could have developed into another Miami. Officials uncovered an 18-year-old "hippie" law (the irony is beautiful) which prohibited the music. The sheriff sent 200 officers of the law to the soirce and about 500 protesters stopped by. To top it all, it rained. Less than 100 of these wimpy sadists actually attended.

If you don't believe in a merciful God, at least have faith in poetic justice.

Oh, poo! A little rain scared them away. Don't bother crawling out of the mud, fellas. Swim in your ocean of hate. Don't worry about evolving into vertebrates. Hopefully, the powers-that-be won't let you walk upright.

Or will they? Louisiana citizens recently elected a former Klan Imperial Wizard of cromagnon mentality named David Duke to lead their fine state into the next decade. It doesn't bode well for the country as a whole when a man who heads a group known as the National Association for the Advancement of White People is elected to the State Legislature. I don't think Dave and Tom should get together to tip a few.

I hear the nation is making rapid advances in civil liberties. Funny. I haven't seen any lately. What's goin' on?

Therefore, I propose the National Association for the Advancement of All People. Except skinheads — I'm not sure they qualify as human.

Student Center Night falls short in attendance

The Karate Club kicked into gear for a martial arts demonstration in the Scrounge Friday at Student Center Night.

by Melanie Jenkins Staff Reporter

The 18th annual Student Center Night, sponsored by the Student Program Association (SPA) was held Saturday night.

The event included demonstrations and tables by student organizations, a clown, a caricaturist, a belly dancer and local bands.

The crowd was "a little thin in the early evening," said Laura McCraken (AS 90), special events chairwoman of Student Programing Association [SPA].

'We've added an illusion show and Sound Tracks Recording Studios this year, she said. "We've also tried to book popular bands to get more students to come."

Native Delaware band The Snap was featured all night in the Bacchus Room of the Perkins Student Center.

They played mostly original material, such as "Something Good" and "Club Dance" and popular hits like "Pulling Mussels from a Shell" by the group Squeeze.

We gave a full slot for The Snap because they are so popular now," McCraken said.

Amy Gee (ED 89) said The Snap was the best part of the night because "there was more room to dance [in the Bacchus Rooml than in the Stone Balloon."

Show Stoppers, a student organization that was formed last semester, performed a music revue between sets of The Snap. They sang and danced to hit Broadway tunes.

Show Stoppers ended the revue with their version of the movie Dirty Dancing's "I've Had the Time of My Life," as they pulled the audience onto their feet and onto the dance floor.

Jordan Harris (AS 92) said he was disappointed that The Three Stooges Film Festival scheduled for the night was cancelled, but he still had fun.

The clown was the best part of the evening, and I even won a bag of popcorn from the Resident Student Association's (RSA), Wheel of Fortune," he

The Golden Blue Singers premiered at the Student Center Night, harmonizing to Information Society's "Pure Energy" and the Mamas and Papas the "California Dreamin'.

A karate demonstration was presented by the Seidokan Karate Club, and students won scarfs raffled by the Student Association of Apparel Designers.

Brendon McKinney, an acoustic guitarist, entertained students with songs of Bob Dylan, Billy Joel and Bruce Springsteen.

Other local bands performing were Minutes After and Parrish Blue.

The Panhellenic Council promoted sorority rush to interested students, according to Lindsay Remington (BE 91). assistant rush chairwoman of Panhellenic.

Other student organizations with tables at the Student Center Night were Circle K. Amnesty International, the Off-Campus Student Association, the Emergency Care Unit, the Unitarian University Student Organization, the International Folk Dance Club and Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress (DUSC).

Low attendance disappoints bands at activities night

by Chris Rice Staff Reporter

"Student Center Night...Don't Miss It." That's what the flyers read.

But judging from the low attendance Friday night, most people decided to go elsewhere.

The Student Programming Association, along with a number of student organizations, participated in the event.

The main attraction of the night was three bands playing in the Bacchus and Rodney rooms of the Perkins Student Center The Snap, who performed all night in Bacchus, played their usual brand of fun — "bar band" music.

Besides their own originals, they played cover songs of everything from the Grateful Dead to Joe Jackson to Smokey Robinson and the Miracles.

But most importantly, they succeeded in keeping at least a small crowd on the dance floor and in the bleachers of the Bacchus Room.

The band, Minutes After, from Philadelphia, were not as successful.

university, Smith said, because of Teeven's proposed ideas of creating new office space in Newark.

The city has had good leadership under Mayor William M. Redd, who will be leaving his office this spring after 19 years, he said.

"I respect his ability," he said. "I think we're losing a very good leader."

He said he has "problems" with the idea of a student running for mayor of Newark.

Smith said students are usually only in the area for four years and during that time they are concerned with their education

"I'm not sure you can be a full-time student and a parttime mayor," he said.

Smith, a vice president for the Newark branch of Wilmington Trust, said he enjoys his position as a councilman contributing to the city of Newark.

She added that this space would not be available via the housing lottery.

Brown is coed by floor, with the first floor housing female students.

However, the office area in Brown would not necessarily be open to just females, Carey said. She said it depended on different factors, such as the bathroom situation — if a full working bathroom can be put in near the offices or not.

Freshmen will probably not be placed in this area, Carey said, explaining that upperclass students from one of the extended housing waiting lists will be placed there.

"A firm decision hasn't been made yet," she said.

Carey discussed other plans that are being made for extended housing students next year, stressing that arrangements are still very tentative.

She said that floor lounges may not be necessary for temporary housing next year.

This year, students in floor lounges were placed into regular rooms in the beginning of the year, except for those in Dickinson lounges who remained there until mid-fall.

Students will still be housed in Conover Apartments. Carey said this year there were fewer graduate students in the apartments, so more undergraduates were housed there.

"It's not really a large enough area for people who don't know each other well," Carey said.

Tripling, which is placing three students into doubles, will continue.

"We plan on basically using the same triple rooms [next year] as this year," Carey said. She said that the Housing and Residence Life staff placed at least 95 percent of the students in triples into regular rooms.

Kerri Fingerhut (AS 92), an extended housing student in Harrington A, said, "Brown sounds good [for extended housing]. I don't know about Cannon — if I'd want to live in a basement, with not many other students on the floor."

"People who have records on searches have been asked to retain them because if someone wants to know how a search was done and who was examined, we will have the information," Loessner said.

Ronald F. Whittington, assistant to the president and acting affirmative action officer, said the request to cease disposal of search/recruitment records was "a chance for the university to do better bookkeeping."

The request was issued, "not because the university was doing something wrong, but to do something better," he added. It was an attempt to make university records more consistent and efficient Services Marie Gould said when a salaried staff position is opened, the personnel department is responsible for advertising that position, forwarding all qualified candidates to the proper departments and setting up interviews.

There must be a job-related reason given when a person is not hired and that reason must be submitted to the Personnel Office which retains it for a certain period of time, Gould said.

The hiring of professional staff is handled by the individual departments and all application refusals go directly to the Affirmative Action Office, she said.

"Records retention is a good idea," Gould said. "If the university is ever questioned in the future, records will be available as back-up to justify decisions made."

Willetta A. Stamp, senior secretary of the Affirmative Action Office, said, "Any female and minority applications that have been rejected are kept available by this office.

"We keep the records indefinitely and contact qualified people when positions open to see if they would like to be considered," Stamp said.

Individual credentials sent to the Affirmative Action Office do not go to Archives, but information on searches go there after four or five years, Stamp said.

Gould said when Archives is about to destroy a group of records, the office sends out a letter which notifies individual departments and gives them the opportunity to request that their records be retained.

Loessner said about 8 percent of university records must be retained permanently while 92 percent are kept for specific periods of time.

"If we didn't destroy some records we would be building new buildings every year to house them," he said.

...probe becomes investigation

Grumbacher said there will probably be more interviews with university officials.

Grumbacher said the investigation will last at least one

"We might find nothing," said Grumbacher, but he added, "We must respond as best we can."

If the investigation finds racial discrimination on campus, state funding to the university could potentially be withheld, according to Grumbacher.

In January, Grumbacher indicated interviews began with President E.A. Trabant and included Ronald Whittington, assistant to the president and acting affirmative action officer. Others interviewed included Jack Miles, executive director of the President's Commission to Promote Racial and Cultural Diversity and Crystal Hayman, co-chair of the Black Faculty/Staff Coalition.

More administrators and trustees have been interviewed since then, according to Grumbacher. He would not release the names of the individuals with whom he spoke.

Grumbacher said the commission would "try to find out what the role of the board of trustees is and act accordingly."

Plant said, "I have full confidence that the Human Relations Commission will get to the bottom of some of the problems of the University of Delaware and they do have many.

"For the most part, the trustees are the problem," Plant added.

Plant said he submitted a written request to the U.S. Department of Education to report the Human Relations Commission's plans and ask the federal government to conduct another inquiry.

"I'm not convinced," said Chuck Stone, co-chair of the Black Faculty/Staff Coalition, "that the University of Delaware has a lot of racial problems.

"All investigations [like this] have the ultimate goal to open up the process for information purposes, and that's valuable," he added.

"But I do feel that the commission did respond to some political machinations on the part of State Representative Plant."

Stone agreed with the commission's finding that certain colleges may be more advanced in hiring minority and female faculty members.

There are certain departments that are way ahead [in hiring]," said Stone, "and I think the department with the best record on campus is the English department."

Dr. James Sills, chairman of the President's Commission to Promote Racial and Cultural Diversity, called the investigation a "positive development."

"Hopefully the investigation will help to speed up the pace of change here at the university,"

Andrew B. Kirkpatrick, chairman of the board of trustees, said Friday he had "no particular reaction" to the commission's decision.

"If they have any kind of information that there might be some kind of discriminatory practice going on someplace in the university I would certainly want to know it," he said.

Kirkpatrick said he was interviewed by the commission in the preliminary inquiry but added he did not know of any particular instances of discrimithe facade from being altered.

Having the building on the National Registry mainly has tax advantages, Teeven said. He added, "There is nothing historical to that [building]."

Having the marquee torn down at the early-morning hour was a decision made based on the lack of people and traffic on Main Street at that time. Teeven said he did not expect anyone to protest the removal of the marquee.

"I'm very angry," said Pat Maguire, a Newark resident who watched the removal of the marquee. "We spent many happy hours in this place."

Maguire, a resident of the city for 15 years, said the theater could be saved if community members, including students, showed some concern.

versity's Air Force ROTC.

The top three finishers in each age group, the overall top male and female winner, and top university finishers received awards.

The two top university student finishers were Don Lyons (AS 90) and Amy Oppermann (AS 92). Each received the Domino's Pizza President's Cup.

Tarver said the race went well and many people volunteered their help.

Ann Wehner, the female winner and a university graduate, said the race was well-organized.

"There were a lot of people at the corners cheering runners on," said Wehner.

Volunteers who helped with the race were WXDR, Sigma Chi Lambda fraternity, Delaware Sports Club, Newark Police, and University Police. Clifton said it is important to have a large number of people along the race course.

"One of my main goals is safety — safety comes first," he

Next year Clifton plans to open the race up to team competition so fraternities, soronties, and dormitory floors can enter the race.

The St. Patrick's Day 5K Race has grown from 100 runners in North Campus to 500 participants with runners from Delaware, Maryland and Pennsylvania.

"I can see it building to 2,000 people down the road," Clifton said.

Delaware Sporting Goods provided prizes and gift certificates.

sex with alcohol and the inability to discuss AIDS with their partners put students at greater risks, Keeling explained.

Students can reduce their risks by learning to change their behavior and developing skills that will help them protect themselves, he said.

Learning how to talk about protection with partners, knowing what behavior increases risk and separating alcohol from sex are just a few of the ways students can protect themselves from AIDS.

"You can't prevent anyone else from getting AIDS, but you can prevent yourself simply by saying, 'the rest of my life is more important than the next five minutes,' " Keeling said.

Academy Street to Main Street was to begin by Nov. 30, according to Nagle.

Vance Funk, a university lawyer said, "At the time the settlement came about, [the university] was unable to complete the settlement because Mr. Cohen had not been able to evict his tenant yet.

"They had a meeting with the judge and the judge explained what he thought would be fair," Funk said. "They were negotiating." A filed court statement said Bolen asked the court for the following:

- to continue possession of the property until March 31,
- to have the option to renew the lease for an additional 5year term.
- his landlord be forbidden from attempting to prematurely terminate the lease.

The case was heard in the Court of Chancery, which handles real estate and corporation cases.

In addition, a square dance will be held at the George Wilson Community Center Saturday at 8 p.m. The admission fee will go to the station.

WXDR will also be requesting pledges over the air, Tarver said. In the past, alumni of the radio station and the university, The Review, local musicians and businesses have pledged money for the radiothon.

The average pledge is $25, said Les Hendrix (AS 89), student general manager of WXDR.

This pledge entitles community members to a general membership at the station and a baseball cap.

Students, senior citizens and people with a fixed income will receive a general membership for a $15 pledge.

For a $30 pledge, a person will receive a T-shirt; for $35, a coffee mug; and for $40, a duffle bag.

"This is our way of saying thank you for making the donation," said Hendrix.

Hendrix said live bands will be broadcasting over the air during the radiothon.

Marcus Hook, a student band, will broadcast live Friday at 6 p.m.

BREAKING the CHAINS

Board members maintain stance on divestment in face of continued national debate

This is the last in a threepart series on the situation in South Africa and the dilemma of divestment

The University of Delaware continues as one of the nation's largest landgrant universities to hold stocks in companies with South African ties.

by Corey Ullman
Managing Editor

Historically, as one of the great seeds of knowledge, higher education has been paramount to burgeoning issues of the day.

Some of these issues are feeble outgrowths of a concerned handful, the others are fully rooted in the minds of all — whether welcomed or not.

It is the constant attention given to such issues which causes a tangling of the facts and distorts theirt meaning in the minds of those who, as students, usually work to cultivate such progress.

Such is the fate of divestment — a fate especially visible at the University of Delaware.

"Beaten to death" is a common label placed on the issue of divestment by both students and administrators. Some say that the subject is the unfortunate victim of diverse beliefs.

"I think this is a situation, like many, where you can have a genuine, honest difference of opinion," says Andrew B. Kirkpatrick Jr., chairman of the board of trustees.

The difference of opinion lies simply in whether or not the university should divest its shares from companies which maintain business ties with South Africa

It is a commonly told story of racism and oppression in a land rich with natural resources. Apartheid, the practice of segregating the black majority from the ruling white minority, has been one of the top incivility focuses of the American media for some years now.

It is a situation taking place on the other side of the world, seemingly far removed from the egalitarian town of Newark. But as many American companies and universities have concluded, equality deserves a universal existence, leaving divestment as the means to such an end.

In May 1988, the university's board of trustees made its almost unanimous decision not to divest its holdings from companies which have businesses in South Africa. This came three years after the decision to "partially divest" from companies with holdings in South Africa.

Reasoning behind the board's 1988 decision was explained in their continued support of the Sullivan Principles (now renamed the Statement of Principles).

"We thought Rev. Sullivan's Statement of Principles approach was the right approach and we simply didn't change our minds," explains Kirkpatrick.

The Sullivan Principles were composed by the Rev. Leon H. Sullivan in March 1977 to act as a set of guidelines with which companies were required to comply, in order to fight the continuance of apartheid.

The principles stress the non-segregation of the races in the workplace, along with equal employment, pay and opportunities for all races. Measures included in the principles urge companies to improve living conditions for blacks and coloreds.

Compliance with the principles is monitored according to ratings administered by Arthur D. Little, an auditing company appointed by Sullivan himself.

Strong questioning of the principles' effectiveness arose in the summer of 1985, when Sullivan publicly denounced his own criteria, dismayed by its stagnant effect on apartheid. He later declared full divestment as the only means of halting the injustices pervading South Africa — an opinion he expressed during his visit to the university in the fall of 1987.

Dissenters of the principles argue that although slight reform has occured in the form of construction

Spring: a time for new beginnings and ends — rear ends, not to mention thighs, waists and arms.

Did you just realize that the extra bulk you've been carrying around all winter is not made of wool?

You know it's time to take charge of your body when your friends call you "the refrigerator," and you do not even play football.

Jaimi Rubin When a sign in an elevator says 1200 lbs capacity, do you have to ride solo?

Do you go into the sporting goods store for a pup tent to match your shoes?

If you are what you eat, is your nickname "Twinkie?"

Do you go into 31 Flavors and say "okay?"

any of these questions (or if you even paused to think about them), read on. If not, then you are probably one of those people who can buy clothing in negative sizes.

To start with, let's clarify a few wishful, but unfortunately false ideas, such as:

— Diet Coke is the miracle drink, and therefore it will cancel out the calories of that chocolate cake.

— Haagen Daz is German for "Diz does not have calories."

Opening the refrigerator door is good aerobic exercise.

— Thinking about exercise will increase your metabolism.

- On Golden Pond and Jane Fonda's Workout tape offer the same aerobic workout because they star the

Feature Forum

Chewing the fat

same actress

— The idea that eating after midnight is okay, because it is the next day and the previous day's calories were burned off by 11:59.

 Only having friends heavier than you will make you look thinner, — Only going out at night will make you appear slim (black has that effect).

— It is important to eat a lot before your Chinese class, you will be hungry an hour later.

Okay, the situation is evident and now the facts are presented. Now you need to do the hard part. Oh sure, the Nike commercial says, "Just do it," and you will buy the $70 aerobic sneakers and join a health club. You may go for a few days, or even a week. Then one day it happens.

Oprah or Geraldo is hosting a show you just must watch, you know — something important like Siamese Sumo Wrestling chimps. In other words, the enthusiasm has dwindled and the Nikes-are lost under empty cookie bags.

Guilt overwhelms you every time there is a commercial for Lean Cusine and you consider exercising at home, after you finish your potato chips, of course.

Dieting has become a way of life for me. A typical Monday morning: wake up, brush my teeth, pick out an outfit and start a diet.

A typical Friday morning: wake up, brush my teeth, pick out an outfit and swear I'll start my diet next week.

Society brainwashes us into believing that certain physiques are prime and others not so prime. For example the Barbie Doll, a childhood favorite of mine, has that "to-die-for build." I doubt Barbie ever considered liposuction.

Here is a killer situation — you buy what you think is the hottest skirt you have ever seen. This is the skirt to make the guy you have been scoping forever, finally notice you. However, the day you wear it, so does some other girl, only her skirt is a size 3. She also turns out to be your scope's girlfriend. You've got to love that Murphy's Law.

Have you ever bought what I call a "goal outfit?" An outfit that is one size smaller than what you normally wear, but you just know that you will definitely lose the weight to fit into it. Yeah right, you end up giving it to your roommate, and the worst part is, it looks great on her.

I am certain that aerobics originated as a form of Chinese torture. Jane Fonda's term, "make it burn," should refer to her exercise tape itself. The expression, "once on the lips, forever on the hips," has become the motto I live to avoid. All I have to do is walk into an ice cream parlor and I gain weight. I am a calorie magnet. I say, "Godiva" and the scale goes up a pound. I might as well tape the cookies to my hips — they are going to end up there anyway.

Personally, I consider diet the four-letter word. Exercise and exorcism are synonymous to me.

I know I could never have been a test tube baby, a beaker baby perhaps. Nevertheless, maybe in another life I will be a Christie Brinkley or a Brooke Shields.

Until then, it's carrot sticks for me.

Trilogy: bad plots happen in threes

by William C. Hitchcock Assistant Features Editor

Theater of the surreal. Theater of the absurd.

Theater of the silly.

The E-52 Theater company's Trilogy is a little of all of the above.

The "play" that is being performed is actually a series of three one-act plays, The Lesson, Bringing it all Back Home and An Act of Murder.

The first, The Lesson by Eugene Ionesco, is a lesson in surrealism. There are three characters in the play: a professor, a pupil who is being tutored in the professor's home, and the professor's overbearing maid, Marie.

To make the play surreal, Ionesco has removed all vestiges of character, plot or meaningful dialogue.

The words of the characters make no sense most of the time in the context of what is happening or to what was previously said.

In one instance, the professor lectures about French, Spanish, Neo-Spanish and Italian seemingly as the same language, and assumes that they can all be learned in 15 minutes from his lecture.

Ionesco wants the audience to abandon all of what is conventional reality, but at the same time, he drops in messages on the most basic human conditions. He speaks of sexual power and of what makes a human human, and not a beast.

Sounds confusing and it is. Ionesco has created an amazing intellectual exercise that lulled more than a few members of the audience to sleep. Too bad, they missed something interesting.

But most of the audience was awake and laughing heartily for the next play.

Bringing it all Back Home is about an atypical redneck family in the late 1960s or early 1970s, and has all the ludicrous cliches that one might expect. But it pushes it even one step further.

The 14-year-old son tries to convince his girlfriend to try some pot, "real good stuff," that he bought from the local gas station attendant. The 18-year-old sister dates the football team — the whole team.

And then, two workmen walk in with a coffin which contains the body of the second son recently killed in Vietnam.

Of course, the lid does open and he speaks to the audience of his death. He says that this is his one chance to speak because his mother and two siblings are upstairs and his father is busy making an obscene phone call.

There is no true point and the play is almost as cyclic as The Lesson, but again, through the confusion, the author makes some cutting commentary on life in America.

The point is more direct and executed with less confusion than that of Ionesco. Perhaps it is the difference between the surreal and the absurd.

And then there is just plain silliness in An Act of Murder.

The plot is time-honored and well played out on Broadway, off-Broadway and even off-off-Broadway: before the play can get past its first 10 minutes, someone kills the supposedly real stage manager.

The murder becomes the play and the audience is expected to believe the farce. Beating a dead horse, to say the least

But before condemning this student play by Scott Mason (ED GM), it must be said that in spite of a worn-out plot, Mason manages to create some amusing scenes and a play that keeps the audience interested for its entire running time.

Mason becomes a little overbearing once when he delves into the idea of the illusion of theater.

The audience can tell the difference between reality and the theater. And the audience really does not want to hear why the theater enthusiast loves theater — over and over again.

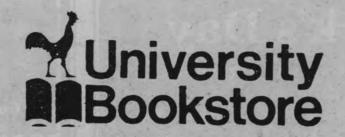

Mentioning one member of the cast of this three-play trilogy would be unfair to the rest.

The entire cast gives excellent performances, and all avoided the dreaded dirge of amateur theater: overacting.

So wander down to 100 Wolf Hall for a lesson in murder, home and theater.

Trilogy will be at 100 Wolf Hall Marc h 16, 17 and 18 at 8:15 p.m.

board maintains firm stance on divestment issue

of school buildings and other physical endowments, the basic premise of racism and apartheid continues to thrive.

If [the blacks] want to have a school, then [the companies] will build a new school for the black people to attend," says Andrea Curran (AS 89), member of the Campus Coalition for Human Rights. "The problem is the new school building doesn't mean the students will get a better education.'

Curran explains that many times the education given to black students is twisted.

"They're even taught that the whites owned the land first just blatant, obvious lies," she

Such a favorable propensity toward the white population remains in the society, while cosmetic reforms merely buffer the harsh reality, says Curran and others opposed to the principles.

The trustees, however, continue to maintain a sense of productivity in regard to their stance behind the principles.

"One of the discussions you hear among board members is the American companies which do business in South Africa and one of the greatest forces of good... one of the greatest forces looking to overcome apartheid," says Kirkpatrick.

The university would no longer be in a position to influence these companies [if divestment was approved]," says G. Arnold Loessner, vice president for advancement and university

"I think most students of the situation here would regard these American companies as the leaders in trying to help the black population in every sense," adds Kirkpatrick. "[The companies] provide jobs, help economically and improve education."

Financial holdings in South African-based, American companies amount to seven percent of the university's portfolio, or $20 million, according to Loessner.

They include 10 companies, such as Johnson & Johnson, Squib Pharmaceuticals and Du Divestment is not an impossibility for the university, Loessner admits. "We could to. The question is what would be the result, both in return on the endowment and in terms of the situation in South Africa."

Rutgers University in New Brunswick, New Jersey evaluated its position on the matter in the fall of 1985, resulting in full divestment of the university's $6.4 million in South Africanbased companies.

The reason given for the actions of Rutgers' two ruling boards was the "escalating political and economical instability in South Africa," reports Ruth Scott, a spokeswoman for the university.

The fact that the state of New Jersey had previously divested all of its holdings may also have been a contributing factor to the university's actions, says Edward Kozack, assistant treasurer of Rutgers University.

Financial results on universities following their divestment is monitored by comparison of two indexes - the Standard & Poor 500 Stock Index and the Boston SAFE Index, which consists of all stock in the S & P 500 that has no employment in South Africa.

According to a report on stock performance of both meet the principles are really divest tomorrow if we wanted indexes from January 1984 to June 1986, the SAFE index outperformed the S & P 500 stock.

> These results show that the act of divestment may be an improvement for university portfolios rather than a detri-

> Although Kozack admits that Rutgers' portfolio of endowments was "somewhat diminished" by the divestment, he explains it is hard to make such calls without a long-term evaluation.

"A lot depends on time and the individual managers picked to manage the university's money," explains Kozack.

"Other universities have shown an improved portfolio. It's an individualized situation."

The situation of university divestment is one which some cite as a necessary action - a moral obligation. Others see divestment as a political movement which should not be a university's concern.

'We really do not have the right to make a political movement on behalf of the university," says Kirkpatrick. "If you look at moral obligations [with regard to business], there are just so many - environmental,

However, many supporters of divestiture view political involvement as inevitable. They further maintain that support for these companies is indirectly supporting apartheid.

But many in the administration see divestment as a statement yielding no progress.

"What we're talking about is symbolism," says Loessner. "It would be much easier to divest of the stock and be rid of the issue, but we don't always take the easy thing."

In addition to some students. many university employees do not agree with this ideology, including Faculty Senate members and two board members who cast favorable votes for divestment.

Rachel Dennis, one of the board members who is a proponent of university divestment feels such an action is an irrevocable responsibility of the university.

"I think that symbolic gestures are important," says Dennis. "To say that they are not is a cop-out.

"I think the University of Delaware has a leadership position in the state," she continues. 'They have a responsibilty to the state and the world community to take a stand on human rights."

Dennis added that the activism of students is very low and that a display of student emotion might make a difference.

Curran agrees. "We try to do what we can, but it's hard. Not many students seem to care.

"What we're talking about is an accumulation," she continues. "If everyone comes together, on all different levels, that's where the strength is."

...Hens suffer again

Delaware Head Coach Bob Shillinglaw was satisfied with the defensive effort, but felt the performance against Virginia the week before was a bit better.

"There were a couple of lapses here and there," Shillinglaw said.

The second-half stubbornness of the Hens' defense held for all but the last minute, and a lastsecond Hen rally fell short as time expired.

"We tried to set up a particular play," said Shillinglaw, "and there was a couple of options we ended up having.

"We took the option of the shot from [in front of the net]," Shillinglaw said of the failing final attack.

Delaware's next game is scheduled for tomorrow at 3 p.m. in Newark against the University of New Hampshire.

the transition."

Four of the five freshmen played either varsity or junior varsity field hockey last fall.

Smith, who doubles as assistant field hockey coach, is familiar with many of the lacrosse team's new faces.

"It helps a lot that the freshmen played hockey," said Sadarananda. "They know the college game is faster-paced. You have to be in control."

Sophomore Michelle Beach will be in control in goal. She replaces Wendy Kridel, who is fifth on the Hens' all-time save list with 115. Beach has 45 career saves and gave up 4.9 goals per game in nine contests last season.

And on the "Beach front" are returning defenders Cassie Vogt, Jennifer Wood, Cheryl Masterson and senior Kathy Cicala who saw some playing time last year.

This season, the team is just taking the proverbial one-gameat-a-time approach. The Hens will open the season at the University of Maryland Thursday afternoon. Saturday they play Richmond University.

If the Hens can live up to the coach's expectations, they just may be living it up at the season's end and all-ECC player Missy Hukill will handle the pitchers.

One thing Ferguson doesn't have on her side is the schedule. In order to qualify for the NCAA Tournament, a team must play at least 26 games. Delaware has 27 scheduled. Two postponements could spell a problem if the Hens put together the kind of year Ferguson is hoping they will.

"I'm still hoping to get a couple more games scheduled," she said.

The schedule does have some advantages for the Hens. The Virginia Tournament in early April should give Delaware some much-needed competition. It will play teams like Georgia Tech and the University of Virginia.

"It should be an exciting season," Ferguson said.

limited facilities.

But the seniors of last year are gone, and the 1989 edition must start from square one.

Practice time and experience in college-level competition are both at a premium for Delaware. The Hens still haven't even formally announced their doubles' pairings for their season opener.

"It's still up in the air," said Rylander, even though he has been looking at Kegelman and sophomore Chris Herak as a pair, as well as Bob Moore and his brother, freshman Jim.

The Florida tour will probably solve Delaware's mysteries and help the team prepare for the opponents of the ECC. But for now, the days before Spring Break may not have sunny skies in the forecast for the Hens.

For Christian Ligé, Big Brother is really watching.

"I try to keep an eye on him as much as I can," said Eric Ligé, a starting defenseman on the men's lacrosse team. "At certain times I can't though because I have to do my own thing in practice."

The Ligés are the first brother combination Delaware Head Coach Bob Shillinglaw has coached at the university.

"I'm sure there is a lot of advice that Christian gets that most freshmen would not," Shillinglaw said.

Eric is a junior economics major who has been an important part of the team since his first year.

Christian is a freshman attackman trying to get some playing time.

The Ligés were born and raised in Towson, Md. and attended Towson High School. Each has been playing lacrosse since the age of 10.

Christian said Eric was not the main reason he chose Delaware. But both agreed that having an older brother at school has helped Christian adjust to college life.

'It makes me feel more comfortable with Eric here," Christian said.

"[Eric] tells me what classes to take, what not to

"He calls for advice a lot about school," said Eric, sarcastically emphasizing "a lot." "My roommates make fun of it."

Both brothers were recruited by universities with Division I lacrosse programs.

Eric said the university was an "ideal place" for him because he liked the number of students and the distance from home (one hour). He was also impressed with Shillinglaw during the recruiting process.

"I thought it would be a good school for Christian for the same reasons it is a good school for me," Eric

He added that he did not try to influence Christian in his decision about college.

Their father, Ulo Ligé, said he did not planned for his sons to attend college together.

But he added that "deep down, I was happy."

Ligé said the situation is working out well. "The boys are happy, which of course makes me happy."

One might think friendly brothers would take it easy on each other during practice, right?

"The first time [playing defense against Christian],

Ligés field a family affair

The Review/Dan Della Piazza Christian (left) and Eric (right) Ligé are the first brother duo under lacrosse Coach Bob Shillinglaw. it was funny. I wanted to beat him," Eric recalled. He paused and said, "...which I did. But now it's just like playing against anyone else."

Christian agreed, "Once I start going, I don't realize

The brothers said it helps having each other close during practice.

'We give each other support on the field which we can't get from other players," Eric said. "If I feel he is making a mistake, I feel free to come up and tell him."

"I like to impress [Eric]. If he tells me he's impressed, then maybe the coach will see it," Christian

"When I'm practicing, it's an extra incentive to work harder because I don't want to disappoint him," Eric said. "An analogy to make would be if my father was at every practice.

The close relationship between Christian and Eric is not limited to the lacrosse field.

Christian said they call one another a few times a week to talk about subjects other than athletics.

"He is one of my friends here too," Eric said. "If I go out, I give him a call to see what he is doing."

They both seem to relate real well," said Shillinglaw. "I think their whole family has a great relationship which has carried over up here."

Eric admitted that, along with youngest brother David, 17, all was not peaceful growing up in the Ligé

"We would fight when [our parents] left," he said. "We would make up some game that we could not play when they were there and we would always get in a fight."

Eric claimed the fights arose because Christian cheated during their games.

Christian humbly agreed.

Fighting aside, Eric and Christian respect each other for their athletic abilities.

"Since [Eric's] come here, he's played every year," Christian said. "That is good to come to a Division I school and play the first year."

Eric said, "I have a lot of respect for how he plays. He does not make many mistakes. He has good field sense; that's what will help him the most."

Shillinglaw said Christian is playing very well in practice and may be given a chance in a game soon.

And if the brother combination is on the field at the same time, Christian said his fantasy is...

"Eric bringing the ball down on a fast-break and passing to me." He paused and thought for a few seconds, then quickly said, "Me passing the ball back and Eric scoring.'

You better pass the ball back, Christian. Big Brother is watching you.

Women's lacrosse faces great expectations

by Drew Ostroski Sports Editor

With its worst season hopefully behind it, the Delaware women's lacrosse team will kick off its second decade of existence this month.

The Hens were 8-9 overall and finished second to Lafayette last year in the East Coast Conference tournament. If that is their worst season, then there is not much to worry about, right?

Nuh-uh. This specific university sports team has very high standards. It seems as if a national title is always a vision if not a reality.

In its ten-year history, Delaware won the NCAA Division I title in 1983 and placed third in 1984. The Hens have also won four ECC titles in nine years.

And there to see it all was Janet Smith. The Hens' highly-successful head coach is 107-45-1 in nine seasons.

So that catches us up on the women's lacrosse team at Delaware to date. Here comes the 1989 season.

The Hens will try to live up to Smith's high standards of success.

"Coach has a lot of expectations of this year's team," said sophomore Stephanie Sadarananda. "She wants to see more teamwork and unity. And not just on the field."

This is a 'tweener year for Delaware. The Hens were 4-2 last season in the ECC in what was considered a building year. Now the squad consists of a little bit of old and a little bit of new.

"We didn't play to our potential last year," Smith said.
"We're hoping to play the best lacrosse we can play."

Having 10 letter-winners back will help.

"We have a good mix of returning players spread throughout the field," said senior Lecia Inden.

Returning are attackers Inden and junior Barbara Wolffe. Inden was the team's leading scorer with 34 goals and eight assists. Wolffe was second with 31 goals and six assists.

Four midfielders are coming back to provide the missing link.

Senior Nari Bush, an All-ECC four-year starter, will provide leadership and was one of the squad's leading scorers last year with 23 goals. The allaround athlete was the ECC's Most Valuable Player while on this year's Delaware field hockey team. She is one of many lacrosse players who participates in both sports.

When the subject of people in a good situation comes up, B.J. Ferguson's name has to come up in there somewhere.

For you see, with almost everyone coming back from last year's school record 22-12 season and some pretty decent replacements, the Delaware softball coach is feeling pretty good right now.

"It's a very nice feeling having so many kids back this year," said Ferguson.

Gone from last year's team are Delaware's all-time leader in games played Wendy Lockhart and pitcher Joanne Zola, who went 10-6 and knocked in 18 runs.

Replacing Zola is freshman

Ferguson's other two pitchers are Sharon Higgins and Kathy Tucci.

Tucci went 11-6 with a 1.52 ERA in 19 games while Higgins went 1-0 with one save and didn't allow a run in 12 and one-third innings.

Offensively, Ferguson expects to be able to use the team's impressive speed by employing the hit-and-run more than in years past.

"The thing I like most about this team is their aggressiveness," Ferguson said. "They don't take all day waiting for the perfect pitch."

Ferguson said the team's speed will be most evident in the outfield, which is anchored by senior Lynne Bartlett. Bartlett, who is in the top 10 in every offensive category in Delaware softball, leads the speedy trio.

Sophomore Carol Gibson and freshman Kim Griffin will join Bartlett in the outfield.

Making a switch from third to first base is Desiree Grill. She started eight games at third, batting .154 before being replaced by sophomore basketball-standout Bridget McCarthy, who will be back again this year.

Up the middle, junior second baseman Cathy Miller, who batted .278 last year, and shortstop Lisa Van Vechten, who stole six bases and batted .167, complete the infield.

Baseball picks up split in season opener

by Craig Horleman Sports Editor

CATONSVILLE, Md. was more than just a couple of pick-up games for the Delaware baseball team during Sunday doubleheader afternoon's against the University of Maryland-Baltimore County (UMBC). The Hens picked up their first win of the season in game one, but juggled and eventually dropped the nightcap.

Delaware second baseman Lenny Richardson picked up from last year while Hens pitcher Bob Koontz picked up from his freshman year and Delaware picked up from October at UMBC Stadium.

On the second pitch thrown, Richardson hit a home run to left field in Delaware's 9-4 win.

Meanwhile, Koontz came out of the bullpen for the first time since 1986 in Delaware's 14-4 loss in game two.

The Hens (1-1 overall) got a chance to play outside for the first time in six months.

Our overall objective today was just to give the kids a chance to play outside," said Delaware Coach Bob Hannah.

The Hens came outside to play with a 1-0 lead going into the second inning of the first game. Delaware took advantage of some shoddy Retriever fielding to score four runs in the second inning off of starter Darren Ritter. The junior pitched four lackluster innings before his exit to the proverbial showers.

In the third inning, sophomore third baseman Tim Sipes cracked a three-run homer and Richardson hit his second dinger of the day off Ritter.

We hit the ball a lot better than I expected," said Hannah, whose Hens had 13 hits.

Delaware managed only four hits off of Kevin Alarie who pitched the final three innings for the hard-throwing Ritter.

"I'm just pleased we played well defensively behind Delaware starter Brakeley]," said Hannah.

Brakely, a junior southpaw, was in perfect command of his fastball, holding the Retrievers (1-1 overall) hitless through three and one-third innings until UMBC's Dan D'Alonzo hit a solo shot that cleared the centerfield wall.

Brakely went six innings, striking out eight while allowing three hits and balking in a

In the sixth inning, the Hens' defense decided to go back inside as they combined two errors and a balk to give the Retrievers two runs.

In the nightcap, Koontz took to the mound and settled in to pitch three strong innings after a rough first inning in which two doubles scored one Retriever victory.

"I had a couple butterflies in the beginning which I expected, not having started for so long," Koontz said

He will only be started occasionally when needed and will be used in his customary closer

Koontz still got a chance to play under his accustomed pressure situations in the bottom of the fourth. With UMBC runners on second and third and Delaware ahead, 2-1, he got second baseman Duane Rhine to strike out and third baseman Pete Rinehart to ground out to end the inning.

That's where the garden party ended for Koontz. The Retrievers scored 11 runs and sent 15 men to the plate in the fifth When the dust was cleared, there were nine hits, including two home runs, two Hen errors and a wild pitch by Koontz

Senior reliever Glen Oneidas. who came in for Koontz in the middle of the inning, was responsible for the two homers.

"Until we can get the pitchers on the mound and develop some consistency, we're probably going to struggle along a bit here and there," Hannah said.

Despite the calamitous lifth inning, Hannah was pleased with the Hens' debut.

"You don't enjoy getting beat 14-4 at the end. But the day served its purpose."

The Hens will face LaSalle in great outdoors of Philadelphia tomorrow after-

Tennis stresses youth in 1989

by Josh Putterman Assistant Sports Editor

With thoughts of Spring Break dancing through everyone's heads, the Delaware men's tennis team has its work cut out for itself.

While students bask in the sun of their favorite hot spots, Coach Roy Rylander will have his troops on a mid-season, fivematch, Florida road trip, tuning up for the remainder of the 1989 schedule.

But it is not all fun in the sun, and by no means does Delaware have it made in the shade.

For the 1989 season that will open Saturday at Georgetown University, the operative word is young. Five of last year's top-six singles players have graduated, leaving senior Dan Kegelman as the Hens' only returning letterwinner of the young bunch.

Kegelman, who compiled a singles record of 12-6 in 1988. figures to be the number one singles player for Delaware, according to Rylander.

The only other senior on this year's team who competed for the Hens in 1988 is Dave Dill, who played in two doubles matches — one with Kegelman and the other with sophomore Bob Moore.

The rest of the squad consists of players who have not competed on the collegiate level.

Freshman Sam Lieber, a Delaware high school state champion of a year ago, will be one of the rookies stepping into the spotlight for the Hens.

Despite the team's lack of experience, Lieber does not doubt his teammates' abilities.

"We've got a really good team," Lieber said. "We have so many young people, and everybody's good."

Kegelman, Lieber and company are looking to improve upon last year's 11-5 match record (4-2 in the East Coast Conference) and fourth-place finish in the 1988 ECC Championships.

Rylander said Lafayette College, Bucknell University and Towson State University are a step above the remainder of the ECC due to those schools' use of both scholarships and indoor courts for year-round

laware denied tournament bid

by Drew Ostroski Sports Editor

Almost a week of hoping, practicing and speculation is over for the Delaware women's basketball team.

The NCAA Tournament and Women's National Invitational Tournament bids were announced Sunday, but the Hens weren't invited to either

"I think that [not getting the NCAA bid] was pretty much expected. I thought we had a better chance at the WNIT." Delaware Head Coach Joyce Perry said Monday.

We still had a great season and I don't think it's going to lessen the season any. It just would have been icing on the post-season bid."

Delaware (23-6 overall) had its cake and ate it too during the regular season. The Hens won the East Coast Conference tournament and set a school record with 23 wins.

The 48-team, Division I NCAA Tournament includes 19 automatic qualifier bids to league champions. But the ECC does not receive an automatic

"The NCAA has been very stingy with the automatic qualifiers and has elected to go with more at-large bids," Perry said.

Delaware Athletic Director Edgar N. Johnson stressed the importance of a stronger schedule for the Hens.

"The question is what can we do to make ourselves more cake to get recognition with a competitive to get what they are looking for," he said Monday.

"We have to do what we can do outside of our conference to improve the schedule so that we get consideration."

Delaware didn't help itself this season when it lost earlyseason games to Morgan State, Villanova and Fordham. The Hens also lost to nationallyranked LaSalle, 67-63, late in the season.

"I can't say that we were totally snubbed because there were some opportunities that we needed to take advantage of on our schedule," said Perry. "We had two chances with two teams, [Villanova and LaSalle], that got in [the NCAAs]," Perry

"Wins over both of those teams, plus our record this year would have had to give us some recognition."

As for the WNIT, there were 63 teams that won 20 or more games this season. After the NCAA announced its pairings, 15 of those 20-game winners remained for the invitational.

"I thought if we didn't have a shot at the NCAAs, we would certainly have a shot at the women's NIT," said Johnson.

"Any team in our conference who is going to get a bid needs to play some tough non-conference opponents and win. That's the bottom line," Perry said.

'We're at a crossroads now," Johnson said. "We have a quality program and I think we're ready to take off."

But will the Hens be flying in a tournament this time next

"I thought that going to the WNIT would be a vehicle to demonstrate how strong our conference and our program at the university is. We just didn't get that opportunity this year," Johnson said.

"And I hope we don't have it next year," he chuckled, "because next year we'll be in the NCAAs."

Hens' comeback spoiled

by Josh Putterman Assistant Sports Editor

BALTIMORE - Give the Delaware men's lacrosse team credit.

Having an unscheduled, seven-day layoff due to inclement weather not only forced six days of practice into the climate-controlled Delaware Field House and postponed the Hens' scheduled game against Lehigh until May 3, but also relocated Saturday's home game to Sunday at Loyola College.

So what does the team get as a reward for its waiting? Another one-goal loss.

Delaware (0-2 overall) took another national powerhouse to the limit in a 6-5 loss to Yale University.

Yale senior midfielder Michael Babcock scored with 57 seconds remaining in the game, unknotting a 5-5 deadlock, to spoil a furious Hen comeback.

The Elis/Bulldogs (take your pick) of the Ivy League, ranked 12th in Lacrosse Magazine's pre-season poll, had the Hens all cooped up for most of the game, outshooting Delaware 37-19 and laying heavy hits on the Hens at both ends of the artificial turf of John M. Curley Jr. Field.

'We dug ourselves a hole in the first half," senior defenseman and co-captain Ed Brady said of Delaware's 5-0 deficit at Yale (1-0) gave the Hens an early shovel for the excavation as Bulldog senior junior netminder Gerard deLyra only 10 seconds into the contest. Two-and-a-half minutes later, Allen tallied again for a 2-0 Yale lead.

Delaware was on both the giving and receiving end in the first two quarters as it received brutal hits from the Elis and gave Yale the ball for the majority of the half.

"[The Bulldogs] had the ball the whole first half," Brady said. "And when [we are] taking that contact on [their] shots, it's tough for us to stay together."

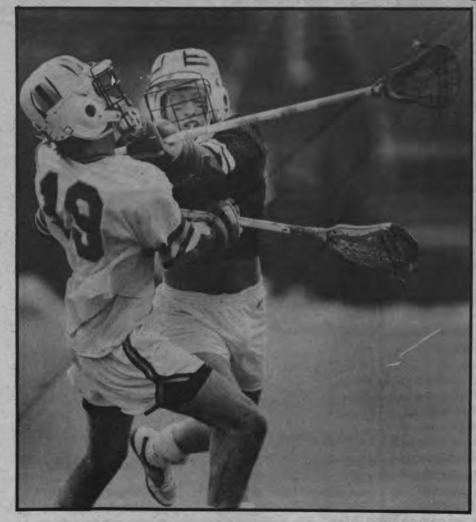

But a 5-0 deficit does not become a 6-5 loss without the regrouping and the patented comeback.

Senior attackmen John Boote, Dan Britton and Tom Ervin, along with freshman attackman Tom Stanziale and sophomore attackman Rusty Ward, all scored second-half goals to spur Delaware's late

Stanziale's first goal of the season tied the score at five with 2:38 remaining in the game Ervin's goal was his third of the season and the 72nd of his career, placing him 10th on the Hens' all-time goal-scor-

The comeback would not have been without the defensive effort turned in by Delaware in the second half. The defense and deLyra shut down the Elis' offense.

"I was really pleased with the way the guys responded," said Brady.
