WHEN LISA GOES TO WASHINGTON,
WE ALL GO TO WASHINGTON.

Paid for by Lisa Blunt Rochester for Congress

Dear Juliana, Won't you join other Democratic volunteers like me in voting for women in Delaware in the Nov. 6 election?

When I decided to run for office, I didn't ask anyone for permission. I knew that if our government was going to be more representative of my voice, as a woman and especially a woman of color, I had to step up. I knew that for our government to look more like the country I know and love, I had to be unapologetic about running for office on my terms.

BT Dallas

Up and down our state and across our country, women are stepping up just as I did two years ago. A record number of women are on ballots this November all with a similar message - time's up. Time's up on women being shut out of the decision-making process. Time's up on sexual assault, harassment, and inequality in the workplace and in our society. Time's up and now we're stepping up to take action.

Women represent 50 percent of our population, yet only 19 percent of our representatives in Congress are female. Delaware broke the glass ceiling in 2016 when, with your help, I became the first woman to represent Delaware in Congress

Whether it's our government trying to insert themselves into our healthcare decisions or policies being made without us that will impact us and our daughters for generations to come, we're saying time's up. We're not asking for permission anymore. We're taking our seats at the table to ensure that our voices are heard, and our values are represented.

This election couldn't be more critical to the vision we all have for our future - a government that is inclusive and representative of all of us. I am increasingly motivated by the incredible women who are running on the ballot with me, and am increasingly motivated by the incredible, highly qualified women who are working to help elect us. We know when women support other women, there is no limit to what we can achieve, and we know that when women have a vote in our political process, the policies enacted are better for our state and our country.

Today, tomorrow, and the next day we need to continue mobilizing to capitalize on the engagement we've seen since the 2016 election, but not just for women to win elected office. It's also to ensure that whether it's, boardrooms, the state house, or the halls of Congress, women are given the opportunity to lead because when we do our economy, our government and our country will be better for it.

We're qualified, we're energized, we're organized, and we're ready to take our seat at the table, but we need your help. This November 6th, I ask for your vote, and I ask you to vote for the women up and down the ballot in Delaware who are stepping up to ensure our voices are no longer shut out of our government or our society.

It's time.
