college of EDUCATION

The College of Education is organized into two departments: Educational Development and Educational Studies. The Department of Educational Development is committed to the preparation of professional involved in teaching, administration, and other aspects of the educational process. Students may choose to concentrate in either special education, elementary education, or both. On the other hand, the Department of Educational Studies is most concerned with what education is and how it can be made better.

The program is small and specialized. Training begins with clinical experience, observation, tutoring, group instruction, and finally, each senior student is given the opportunity to teach in local schools for one full semester.

The College of Education also provides advisement and assistance to students in the College of Arts and Science who wish teacher certification in their chosen field.

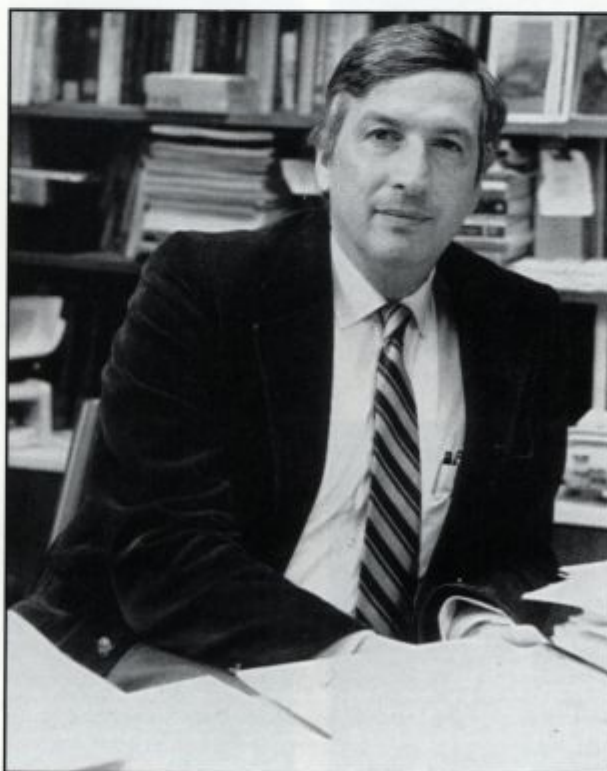

Morris Library is very helpful in research and studying.

college of ENGINEERING

Workers busily construct the new composite building on Academy Street.

The College of Engineering is rated as one of the best educational programs in the country. This is due to the quality of education in the engineering departments offered. Students must choose to major in chemical, civil, electrical, or mechanical and aerospace engineering. In addition to the college's four-year degree programs, five-year programs are offered jointly by each of the engineering departments and the College of Arts and Science. Through this collaboration, opportunities are expanded to those engineering students who wish to obtain a liberal arts education as well as a technical one.

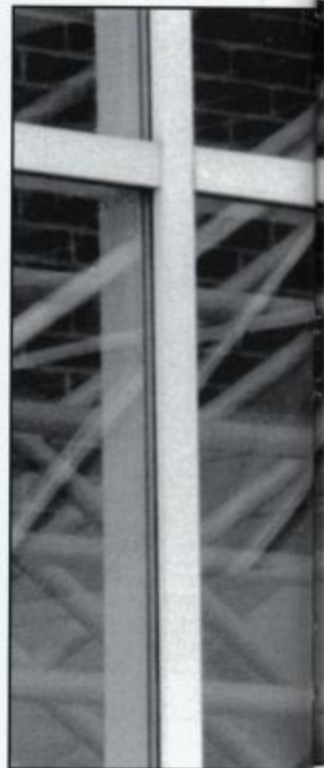

Admission to the program is competitive, and the study hours are long and hard. Students learn to apply math, science, and engineering theories to solve technical problems. Instruction is carried out both in the classroom and in the laboratory.

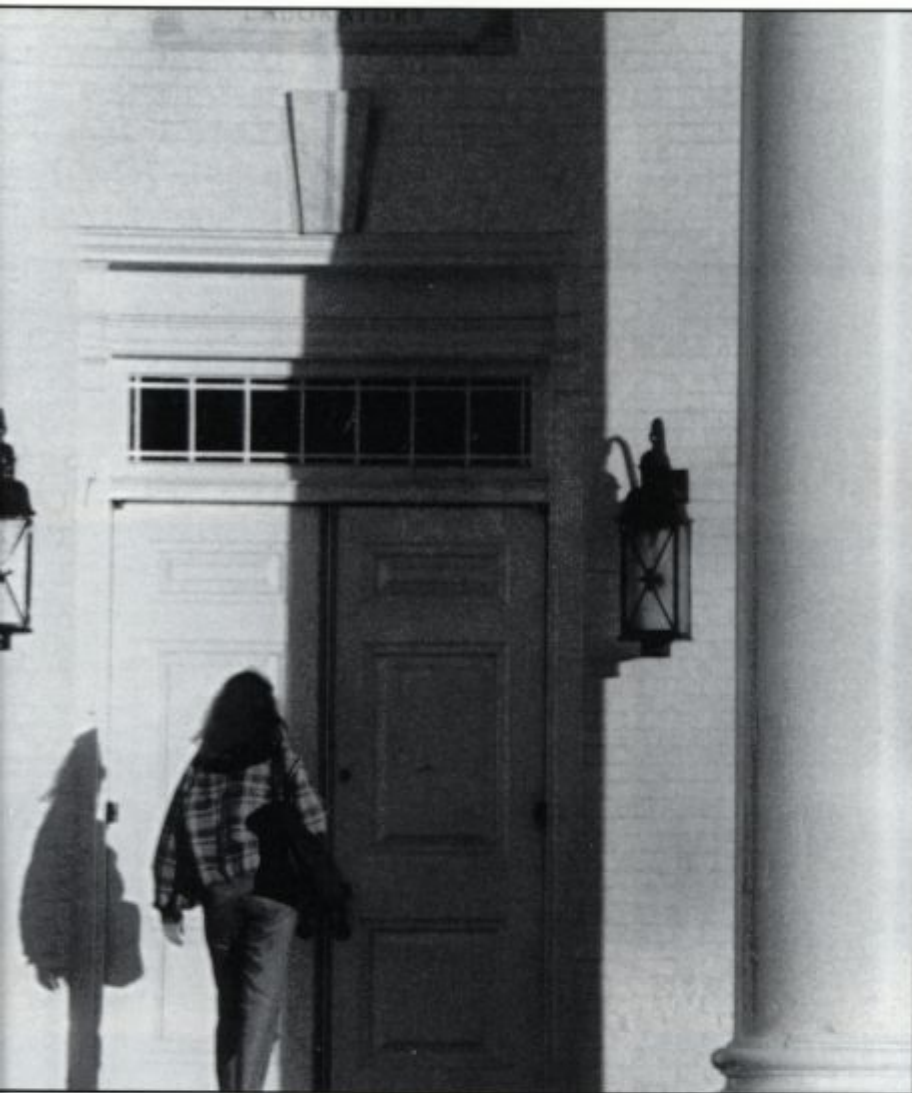

Engineering courses begin at the freshman level. These courses deal with such subjects as chemical kinetics, digital systems, electrical networks, fluid and solid mechanics, material science, thermodynamics, and transport phenomena. In general, sophomore and junior courses provide the background for the application and design-oriented courses at the senior level.

Engineers have a variety of career possibilities from which to choose and may specialize in research, consulting, planning, design, construction, management, teaching, writing, or sales.

Jeff Wardrop and Bob Zeller collaborate on their Senior design homework.

college of HUMAN RESOURCES

Allison Hall houses the College of Human Resources.

The College of Human Resources provides majors for students interested in helping solve problems in society. The central focus of the interdisciplinary program is the individual, the family, and the consumer.

The college is organized into four departments: Individual and Family Studies, which includes life-span development education; Food Science, which includes biology, chemistry, and engineering technology related to food; Nutrition and Dietetics, which includes nutrition science, nutrition education, and food service systems management; and Textiles, Design, and Consumer Economics, which includes textile and clothing, resource management, consumer economics, and interior and apparel design.

Many campus resources are utilized by the college including Wellspring, Student Health Services, and Center for Counseling. All human resource students are also encouraged to develop their own particular interests and abilities through participation in the programs of the Student Center, student organizations, and campus publications.

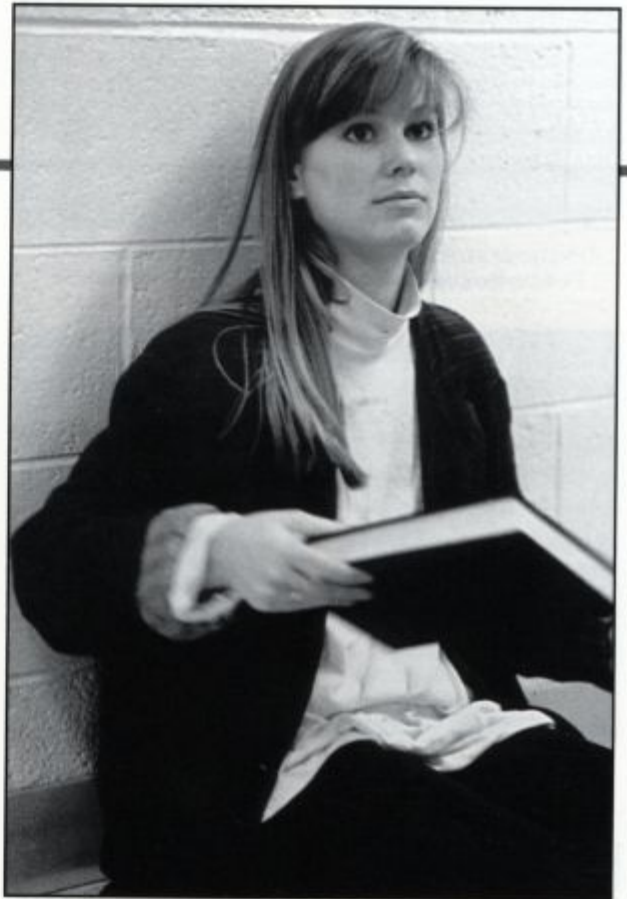

Have a Coke and a smile!

Elementary Education majors get practical experience working at the university's pre-school.

Bonnie Beck patiently waits in the hall for class to begin.

college of NURSING

The College of Nursing involves a rigorous course schedule designed to develop the knowledge, understanding, and skill essential for the practice of professional nursing, and to provide the basis for graduate education. This program is always changing in attempt to keep up with technological advances within the field of medicine.

The first two years of the program include foundation courses in the natural, social, and behavioral sciences, liberal arts, and an introductory nursing course. The third and fourth years of study include clinical and nonclinical nursing courses as well as liberal arts and science courses. Many health care agencies in the Wilmington-Newark and nearby areas are used for clinical teaching.

The College of Nursing is accredited by the National League for Nursing and is competitive. Students who have earned recognition for superior academic achievement may be elected to the Beta Xi Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau, the national honorary nursing society. As a result, the clinical study and Delaware's good reputation make a nursing degree worth the effort.

McDowell Hall houses the College of Nursing.

One of the nursing students gets ready to go to her clinical.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION, ATHLETICS, AND RECREATION

Elizabeth Diver uses the utmost concentration to strengthen her quadriceps.

The College of Physical Education, Athletics, and Recreation is divided into three different programs. The first is Physical and Health Education, which provides K-12 certification for students interested in teaching. Next, the Physical Education Studies program prepares students for graduate study, exercise physiology, biomechanics, athletic training, or fitness management. Lastly, Recreation and Park Administration prepares students for careers in the leisure service industry.

The college's students participate in research and experimentation, take physical fitness tests, and must follow a self-prescribed plan of action, diet, and exercise. Internships or clinical experiences are available in each degree option.

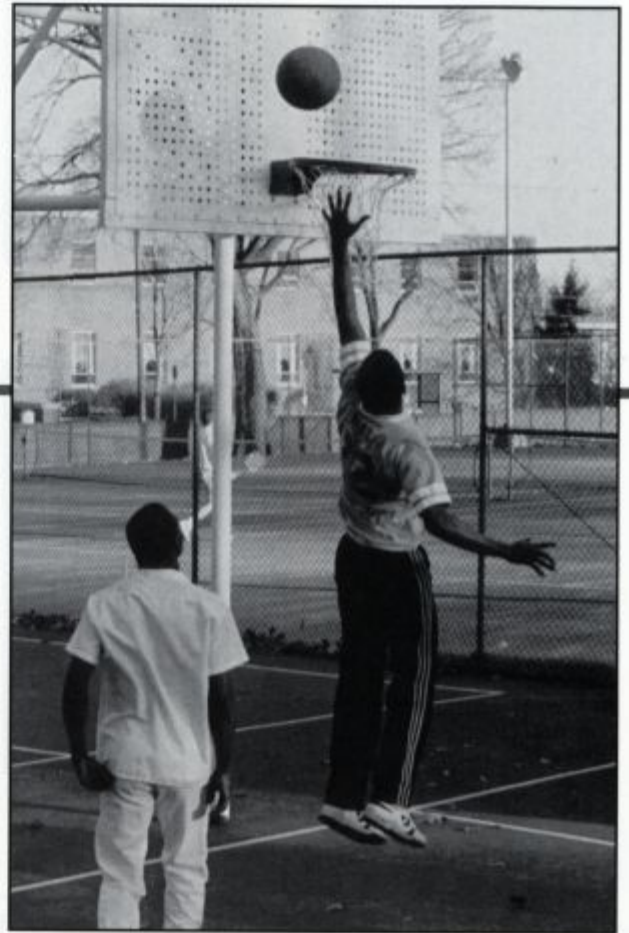

Although the College of Physical Education, Athletics, and Recreation has one of the smaller enrollments, hundreds of students use the facilities daily to stay in shape. The activities of the college include elective lifetime sports courses, intramural sports, and an intercollegiate athletics program in addition to the three degree programs.

Tennis courts aren't just for tennis anymore.

Basketball players practice on the courts by the Student Center.

college of MARINE STUDIES

The College of Marine Studies curriculum provides opportunities for study, research and interdisciplinary masters and doctoral degrees in ocean science, marine biology and biochemistry, applied ocean science, and marine science.

Graduate students specialize in one of four areas, but they must be familiar with the other three. Undergraduate students are advised to take courses in their area of interest as well as introductory marine courses. Individual participation with various aspects of Marine Studies is also encouraged.

The college has a Marine Studies Complex located in Lewes, Delaware, available to graduate students only. The college also manages the University Sea Grant and receives federal funding for building, research, training, and educational services.
