

GRADUATES

The Class of 1975 have spent their undergraduate days at a time when America was rediscovering and re-evaluating many of its political and social values. Four years ago, when the majority of the graduates were starting at Delaware, the United States was still deeply involved in Vietnam, there were still anti-war demonstrations on campus, and Richard Nixon was on top of everything. A lot of people on campus still fervently believed in "consciousness III" but Spiro Agnew continued to run around the country with relative impunity. Between then and now, Nixon rose to his peak of power and fell, the Vietnam War ended twice, Agnew became a shoo-in for the 1976 presidential nomination and then narrowly escaped jail. The Democratic Party recovered from major setbacks, the New Republican Majority didn't, and Senator Sam Ervin became a folk hero. Four years ago it was still possible to believe that a college degree equalled a good job; now we're all being thrown out into the worst job market since 1931.

Supposedly, college students have "mellowed" through all of this. Whatever went down in the Sixties and early Seventies, whatever it really was, is all over. At least that's what all the newsmagazines and big opinion makers say. Now there aren't any really definable trends one way or the other among students graduating from college. But then again, the college student no longer is easily categorized. People who've been away from school for several years are returning to complete degrees and are doing it at their own pace with no rush to get out in four years. A college graduating class today has greater diversity — in age, interest, background and plans, and any attempt to characterize the Class of 1975 would more than likely fall way short of its goal. About all one can really say, given the current economic and social climate, is that things won't be the way a lot of people thought or hoped they might be, and for the time being, the best thing to do is just try to "keep on keepin' on."

Larry A. Hanna, '75

Growth — that's what a university is all about. Few seniors leave Delaware with the same ideas and outlooks they had when they entered: the educational, social, cultural and intellectual opportunities offered at Delaware facilitate the subtle growth and change that is the result of being a part of a university community.

Over the past four or five years, the University of Delaware has greatly increased the many services, activities, and educational opportunities it affords its students. New facilities have been added; north campus complex, science and music buildings and a new Arts & Science building under construction, Bacchus coffee house, and a much sought-after Rathskellar. The opportunities for personal development and growth have been many and diverse. Ironically though, this year has seen a sharp reversal in this direction toward enhanced student growth. Financial difficulties may necessitate the reduction of many services and programs and limit the opportunities for student involvement and participation. The possibility that some university buildings may be closed, and that certain courses and cultural events may be cancelled seems imminent. The much disputed tuition policy, whereby a student must pay an additional fee for each course above a fifteen credit limit, coupled with the slow rise in room and board as well as tuition rates means, in effect, that a student may be paying more and receiving less.

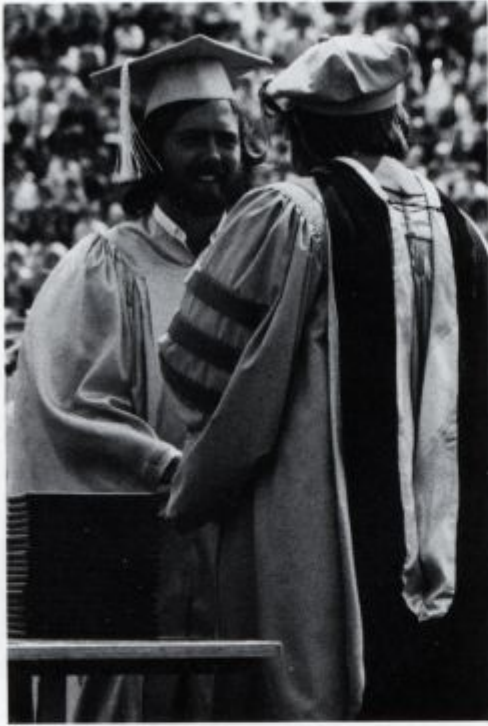

Many seniors now leaving Delaware are thankful for the knowledge, friends and experiences this university has provided. Many more may simply be grateful that they're getting out before the deluge. In any event, most are hopeful that the problems which threaten to damage the quality of education and reduce the variety of services and cultural opportunities provided at Delaware will be resolved in order that present and future students will again be able to benefit from the improvements and growth of the university.
