Celebrating 20 years of art

Two decades later, Newark Arts Alliance looking to expand offerings

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

The Newark Arts Alliance celebrated 20 years on Saturday with live jazz music, local art and a new logo.

The anniversary gala "And All That Jazz" was held at the Unitarian Universalist Fellowship of Newark and featured paintings, photography, mosaics and other creations donated by local artists. Guests enjoyed food and drink as they bid on pieces in a silent auction.

They also voted for their favorite work of art, which was Debbie Hegedus' fabric painting called "Mending My Broken Heart."

The organization, headquartered in Market East Plaza on Main Street, holds art shows, classes and other regular events.

Terry Foreman, former NAA executive director, has been active in the organization since it first began in 1993. She said the last 20 years have been amazing and thinks the group has so far been successful in creating a culture of "user-friendly art."

Foreman said many people are intimidated by art because they think they won't understand it and won't be welcome, but the NAA promotes the exact opposite: art is for everyone. The organization welcomes people of all levels of experience, knowledge and interest and encourages new artists to submit their work to exhibitions.

"We're really good at giving people their first taste of art," Foreman said. "It's a nice place to spot a deal and spot an up-and-coming star."

City discusses new fees, taxes for residents

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

Newark residents may be digging a little deeper into their pockets next year due to a recommendation by city administrators for council to increase property taxes and water rates and implement a new monthly storm-sewer fee.

On Monday night, financial staff outlined the 2014 budget proposal, which council is set to vote on Nov. 11, and explained the various ways the city could increase revenue.

Property taxes may go up next year by 1.5 percent for both residential and commercial properties, Finance Director Louis Vitola said. If approved by council, the typical Newark homeowner would see his or her annual bill increase by $7.29 from approximately $488 to $496, and businesses will have to pay about $38 more each year, for an average total cost of $2,578.

Vitola said this proposed tax hike will generate an additional $129,633 in revenue for the city.

Staff also proposed that water customers living in Newark be charged $2.26 more, bringing their average monthly bill up from $31.11 to $33.37. Those outside the city limits will pay $3.03 more a month for a bill of $44.77, nearly $3 more than what they paid per month in 2013. Vitola said the city will gain $490,000 from the recommended rate increase.

City Manager Carol Houck talked about next year's key projects on Monday night, one of which includes $6.9 million to repair and replace less than 25 percent of the city's drainage system.

Main Street Mile held Saturday

By DAVID MELLON

Several hundred runners took to Main Street Saturday morning as part of the annual Main Street Mile, which raises money for the Newark Police Department's K-9 unit.

The race's overall winner was David Goodman, of Rhode Island, who completed the course in four minutes, 32 seconds.

The event was sponsored by the Downtown Newark Partnership and several local businesses.

Nic DeCaire, of Fusion Fitness, first came up with the idea seven years ago when he had just opened the fitness center and was looking for a "house charity," he said. A Newark Police officer, who was a member of the gym, mentioned that the department needed money to buy a new dog.

The money raised is used for food and training for the dogs and also serves as an emergency fund in case a dog is hurt or needs to be replaced.

Officials say a K-9 dog costs $10,000 upfront, with an additional yearly cost of approximately $1,500.

UD dedicates new dorm to late civil rights leader

Lucas Redding, grandson of civil rights lawyer Louis L. Redding, said his grandfather is "a shining example of what doing good in the law looks like." The University of Delaware honored Redding on Oct. 4 by naming its newest dorm building Louis Redding Hall.

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

The University of Delaware dedicated its newest residence hall last week to the very man who took the school to court and won 63 years ago.

The dorm building, located behind Perkins Student Center and next to the Harrington turf, was completed over the summer and on Oct. 4 was officially named as Louis Redding Hall, named after Delaware civil rights lawyer Louis L. Redding, who successfully filed a case against UD in 1950 for barring African-Americans from attending the university. As a result, UD became the first state-funded institution to desegregate by court order.

Louis Redding Hall is UD's first building named after a prominent Delaware African-American and is the new home to first-year honors students.

UD President Patrick Harker said that Redding's passion for social justice has forever changed the university, which now boasts diversity as a cornerstone in its "Path to Prominence." He said honoring Redding's importance to the school was "a day long overdue."

"We understand how hard we must work and how far we must go because of him," Harker said.

Redding was born in 1901 and attended Brown University in Providence, R.I., where he graduated with honors in 1923. Two years later, he went to Harvard Law School, the only African-American in his 1928 graduating class, and was admitted to the Delaware Bar the next year. Redding continued to practice law in the state for 57 years and fought for social justice as he challenged discrimination in housing, employment, public accommodations and the criminal justice system until he died at 96 in 1998.

James Jones, UD psychology and black American studies professor, called Redding an American hero and a Delaware treasure for his courage, passion and dedication to social justice, noting Redding's impact on the campus.

He said 2,459 African-American students now attend UD, as opposed to the very few who attended in the early 1950's. Approximately 24 percent of the 2013 freshman class, some of which now live in Louis Redding Hall, are students of color. Still, Jones said the university can do better.

UD's President Patrick Harker unveils the university's newest residence hall as Louis L. Redding Hall on Oct. 4. In 1950, Redding successfully sued UD for barring African-Americans from attending the university. As a result, UD became the first state-funded institution to desegregate by court order.

"We are not where we need to be when it comes to diversity on this campus, but we've come a very long way," he said, as Harker nodded his head in agreement.

Stefan Redding, grandson of Louis L. Redding, said he hopes the new building's dedication will inspire students to continue his grandfather's fight for social justice.

"He has opened a door for us, but we have not yet walked through," he said. "To truly honor that legacy, we cannot just reflect on what he accomplished, we must reflect on how we can bring to bear his vision of equality of opportunity for all."

Police search Newark area for wanted man

By JOSH SHANNON
& JACOB OWENS

jshannon@newarkpostonline.com

A Newark-area man wanted for attempted murder in Maryland is still at large.

Police, K-9 units and helicopters spent Oct. 3 searching an area of Newark for 20-year-old Marquel Nakai May, who is considered armed and dangerous. According to 2012 online court records, May's last registered address was the 400 block of Kemper Drive in Bear.

Delaware State Police filed additional charges Oct. 4 in relation to the search for May, including possession of heroin in a Tier 1 quantity, two counts of first-degree reckless endangerment, one count of disregarding a police officer's signal as well as 10 more traffic charges.

The incident began at approximately 3:55 p.m. Oct.

3 as the Cecil County Sheriff's Drug Task Force located a suspect identified as May in the area of Marrows Road and Wyoming Road, and requested assistance in conducting a traffic stop in order to take him into custody. May is wanted on an attempted murder warrant filed by the Cecil County Sheriff's Office.

He was identified by investigators as the driver of a Jaguar that also was occupied by a front seat passenger, Teron O'Brien, 22, of Wilmington, police reported. Cecil County Drug Task Force members continued to follow the vehicle to the area of South Chapel Street southbound and Blue Hen Drive, where a Delaware State trooper in a fully-marked patrol vehicle pulled behind the Jaguar and activated his emergency equipment in the area of Old Baltimore Pike.

May refused to stop, however, and drove west on Old Baltimore Pike in a reckless manner approaching the Route 896 intersection, police reported. He then continued through a red signal and struck a vehicle that was traveling Route 896 southbound, and continued onto westbound Old Baltimore Pike striking the rear of a second vehicle that was in front of it.

No one was injured as a result of these two collisions, police said.

May's vehicle, however, was disabled due the damage sustained in the crashes and he fled the vehicle on foot into the wooded area located in the northwest corner of Route 896 and Old Baltimore Pike.

O'Brien remained in the vehicle and was taken into custody without incident. He is facing a single charge of possession of heroin in a Tier 1 quantity and was committed to the Howard R. Young Correctional Institution in lieu of a $5,000 cash bond.

Troopers and responding police agencies set up a perimeter around the wooded area and concentrated the search efforts for May by utilizing K-9 teams and a Delaware State Police helicopter.

During the initial search, Delaware State Police requested a Reverse 911 activation through the New Castle County Police communications to alert the public of the search and precautions.

In this concentrated search, May was seen exiting the woods onto I-95 and continued to cross the interstate's southbound and northbound lanes into the wooded area located in the area of Welsh Tract Road. The concentrated search was then shifted to this wooded area and a perimeter again established.

After a more than seven-hour search of the area, however, May was not located.

"It is an ongoing investigation and we are following up some leads on his whereabouts, but we do not believe he is still in the Newark search area," said Sgt. Paul Shavack, DSP spokesman, said Oct. 4. "We are working closely with the Cecil County Sheriff's Office to secure his apprehension."

Investigators did find six "bundles" of heroin, however, which contained a total of 77 bags of heroin, packaged for individual sale totaling 1.925 grams, next to the Jaguar on the shoulder of the road.

Lt. Michael Holmes, of the Cecil County Sheriff's Office, confirmed that May is the suspect wanted in a shooting in Winding Brook near Elkton, Md., on Sept. 2.

Investigators arrived on scene at Willow Court in the Winding Brook neighborhood about 7 p.m. that day to gather evidence and conduct interviews after residents reported a shooting, Holmes said at the time.

"We received a call for gunshots fired and we recovered a (spent) shell in that area," Holmes said, declining to specify the caliber. "About 20 minutes later, we received a call from Union Hospital about a patient there with a gunshot wound. We later determined that the patient was related to the shots fired call in Winding Brook."

May is described as a black man, 20 years old, 5-feet, 9-inches tall and 150 pounds. He was last seen wearing a white T-shirt and jeans.

The public is asked to report any suspicious persons or activity by dialing 911.

Suspects steal 20 feet of copper tubing

A groundskeeper noticed pipes had been ripped down, but not removed, from the building he worked in when he walking into the basement.

The incident occurred on Sept. 27 in the 500 block of Capitol Trail. According to Cpl. James Spadola, a spokesman for the Newark Police Department, the groundskeeper noticed that someone had used force to enter building and pulled down copper tubing in basement.

Three days later, he saw that the burglars had re-entered the building, taken the tubing and also removed additional copper pipes from a water heater for a total of 20 feet of quarter-inch copper tubing with an estimated value of $225.

Spadola said police have no suspects at this time.

Man touches himself behind bank, offends witness

When a woman drove her friend to the ATM last week she looked out her car window to see a man touching himself near the bank, police say.

The incident occurred Oct. 4 at 4 p.m. in the 400 block of New London Road.

Cpl. James Spadola, a spokesman for the Newark Police Department, said the victim was waiting in the car while her friend used the ATM at PNC Bank when she noticed a man who was standing at the rear of the bank looking at her.

Spadola said the victim saw the man manipulating his groin area while he looked at her but she was unsure if he was masturbating.

Police have no suspects at this time but the woman gave a description of a white man between the ages of 22 and 28, big build but not overweight and wearing a colorful shirt with a pattern.

smart meters from the company Duncan Solutions and 20 meters from IPS Group Inc. The pilot program will cost the city nothing and if feedback is positive, the city will expand the program to the rest of downtown in 2014, according to Community Affairs Officer Dana Johnston.

"The intention with installing these types of meters is we hope to make parking downtown easy for visitors," Johnston said. "Adding the option for a credit card has been a trend across the country and is something we hope to make happen here."

The installation of the meters began over the weekend and finished on Monday. Rates will remain the same, costing $1.25 to park in a spot for an hour. The two-hour limit on these metered spots will also remain in effect.

The new meters also accept coins if the motorist prefers to pay that way.

Johnson hopes there will eventually be a corresponding smartphone app that will tell people where a spot is available, how much time is left and allow additional minutes to be added.

Another plan under consideration is "dynamic meter rates," meaning that the rates would double after the initial two-hour time limit.

Overall, the city estimates that expanding the smart meters to all of Main Street would cost $340,000, which was included in the previous year's budget.

In March 2012, the University of Delaware installed similar smart meters in its parking lots, according to Richard Rind, director of auxiliary services. Now, every meter on campus can be paid either with quarters, a credit card or via a smartphone app.

"They provide more customer service and convenience," Rind said. "We did surveying about a year ago and overwhelmingly people asked to use a credit cards at parking meters."

Motorists this week were still getting used to the new meters on Main Street.

"It's going to be helpful because sometimes I don't have quarters," Adam Crosby said as he pulled into a parking space around lunchtime Tuesday.

Down the street, Ryan Lee stuck to older methods and inserted two quarters into one of the new meters, only to see his two quarters fail to register.

"I think it's a great idea, but if it doesn't work, they have to be quick on the maintenance," Lee said.

Out of the Attic

Newark Little League — 1953

This week's Out of the Attic item is a picture reprinted from the July 9, 1953, Newark Post showing Newark's first Little League team.

The picture was taken on the Continental baseball field located between South Chapel Street and Haines Street where the teams practiced and played. Note the twin smokestacks and the Continental-Diamond Fibre Company office-building roof in the background.

The caption reads ... "Operating for the first time in Newark, the Little League was organized this spring by the local Kiwanis Club in cooperation with six sponsors—Avon Products, Jackson's Hardware, members of the Aetna volunteer fire department, the Veterans of Foreign Wars post, the Optimist Club, and the Chrysler Square Club. Playing under an official franchise from the Little League headquarters at Williamsport, PA, more than 80 youngsters between the age limits of 9-12 are having a lot of fun and obtaining invaluable experience in team play, sportsmanship, the development of self confidence — in other words, baseball."

Moving time forward six decades finds Little League still active in the Greater Newark Area not with just 6 teams but with 3 Leagues — Newark American Little League covering western Newark, Newark National Little League covering eastern Newark and the Canal Little League covering south of Newark. This year, 2013, the Newark National Little League All-Stars won the Mid-Atlantic Region title and played in the Little League World Series. This singular achievement was recognized by the city of Newark with ceremonies held during Community Day last month. It will also be honored by an up-coming exhibit at the Newark History Museum.

NPD trading card contest a win-win for Newark

Police award 8 children with prizes

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

When the Newark Police Department unveiled its trading card project to Newark elementary schools last month, Lt. Mark Farrall said, officers weren't quite sure if the students would get into it.

Six days later, police were surprised and impressed to get their first winner.

Cpl. Greg Micolucci and Officer William Smith, who coordinated the project with Cpl. Adam Mease, awarded eight children their prizes last week for collecting all 86 trading cards of NPD officers, K-9s, special units, dispatchers, civilian employees, cars, SUVs and motorcycles.

The kids won either a skateboard, helmet and $100 gift card courtesy of Switch Skate Shop or a new bicycle and helmet from Wooden Wheels Bike Shop.

Students received a starter pack from their teachers last month, but were responsible for collecting the rest of the cards themselves by trading with peers, approaching an officer in their community or stopping by the police department to collect the "officer of the day" card.

Kinga Gul, 6, said her parents took her and her two brothers, Jakub, 10, and Dominik, 11, to the police station every day to collect the cards. Her brothers won the bicycle package from Wooden Wheels, while she opted for the skateboard.

Kinga enjoyed collecting the cards, especially her favorite of K-9 officer Kody which shows the dog jumping over a fence, and meeting the police officers who she said "were all so nice."

Now that she has met some of the officers, she said she is less scared of police than she was before and even asked Farrall, Micolucci and Smith to sign her pink, cheetah-print skateboard last week at Switch.

"I'm still a little bit scared, like this much," Gul said, holding her thumb and index finger about an inch apart. "But they are nice so not that much."

Brandon Espinosa, 7, also went to the police station every day with his parents to collect some of the cards, like his favorite card of Mease. He said he likes that card best because Mease is standing in front of Newark High School, with the school's yellowjacket mascot "Buzz" in the background.

His mother, Liliana, said her son plans to share part of his skateboard prize package with a friend from school who was one card short of winning. Liliana said many students were a few short, but thinks just the trading cards themselves are still a good prize for those who didn't win.

Police officers were friendly and nice to her son, she said, and some even tried to help him collect the cards. Yet, the project meant much more to Liliana and her family than just her son winning a skateboard. She said the contest also brought the community together because parents helped each other trade their children's duplicate cards and made her and her family, originally from Colombia, feel more comfortable around police officers.

"You can see police as somebody that can help you here, and it's not like that where we're from," Liliana said. "That's great."

The community's response to the trading cards has been overwhelming and Farrall said the support was greater than NPD anticipated. He felt the project accomplished the two main goals of showing children that police are approachable and reintroducing the department to the kids, community and the adults, who he said were also surprisingly into the contest.

"It seemed that the parents were having just as much fun as the kids," Farrall said.

Toward the end of the competition, Farrall said many children, like Brandon's friend, needed one or two officer's cards and actually lined up at the station to wait for the officers to come in. Police had to make a corral with crime scene tape to create order within the small crowd, he said, laughing.

Tyler Jacobson, owner of Switch, said because of the trading card project, kids in Newark now look at police officers in a positive light instead of relating them to a bad situation.

"They think of them on the same level of a famous professional baseball player," he said. "They look at them as heroes."

Jacobson said he enjoyed learning about all the different police units shown on the cards and his shop would participate if NPD wanted to do the project again down the road.

"We would be on board, certainly," he said. "It's a cool idea."

Farrall said although the contest was positive for the department, they don't have a time frame for when they will release the cards again. He said this is only the third edition of the project and he and other officers are planning a meeting to talk about how things went and make any changes and improvements for next time.

90 volunteers help clean up Newark

jshannon@newarkpostonline.com

More than 90 volunteers joined together Saturday morning to help beautify Newark as part of the semiannual community cleanup.

For two hours, the volunteers fanned out across the city, picking up litter along road and in parks.

In total, 320 pounds of trash were collected, according to Sharon Bruen, recreation supervisor for the city's parks and recreation department.

The city has held a clean-up every spring for more than 15 years and a few years ago added a second event in the fall, Bruen said.

She noted that while city crews maintain parks, they don't have the time or resources to pick up litter along all the roads in town.

"It brings more hands to the deck," Bruen said.

She said the most trash was picked up along Chris-

Cucina di Napoli changes name, adds Spanish-inspired dishes

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

The Main Street Italian restaurant formerly known as Cucina di Napoli has recently undergone a name change and renovation by its new owners – a family already familiar with the restaurant.

Now called Tarantella di Napoli, the restaurant is named after a dance from southern Italy and is now run once again by the Procope family, the restaurant's original owners.

According to Shannon Protas, director of operations at Napoli Family of Restaurants, the Procopes sold Cucina di Napoli to one of their chefs in 2009, who then sold the restaurant back in November 2012.

The Procopes own four other Napoli restaurants throughout Delaware. Although the restaurant was successful as Cucina di Napoli, Protas said they changed the name at the end of September to give it new life and to signify that it was under new ownership.

same at Tarantella such as penne alla vodka, tortellini aurora, chicken parmesan, mozzarella caprese salad and the $8 student takeout menu.

However, Protas said they hope to stand out from the places on Main Street by giving some of the food a Spanish twist.

"We know there are other Italian restaurants here," she said.

Some Spanish-inspired dishes include traditional paella – a mix of chicken, chorizo, shrimp and clams over rice – and tagliata di maiale – pork tenderloin over Spanish rice with vegetables and chipotle sauce.

Protas said the Procope family originally emigrated from Naples and is channeling its roots by using handmade pasta in Tarantella's pasta dishes, something the restaurant did not do as Cucina. Dishes also now have the same tomato sauce the Procope fam-

"They're trying to bring a taste of home back here," Protas said.

Within the last two months, the restaurant also got a facelift. Wood panelling and sconces were added to the walls as well as new décor and lighting throughout the dining area.

So far, Protas said, community response to the changes have been positive and customers remain loyal to the Napoli restaurant.

Bob Opila and Jim Krajewski enjoyed lunch in the restaurant last week and said the renovations looked just as good as their food tasted. Krajewski said he hadn't been to the restaurant in over a year so he was unaware that it was under new ownership.

"We thought we were going to the old place, turns out it's the new place," he said. "We just know it as 'that good Italian place on Main Street.'"

Protas said Tarantella is here for the long haul and hopes the restaurant will build the client base it had before the Procopes sold Cucina in 2009.

"It's like you're at your mom's house when you go in," Protas said. "Newark's a great location and I know we'll be packed again."

Aetna HH&L honors fallen firefighters with bell ceremony

POST STAFF REPORT

Aetna Hose Hook and Ladder Co. paid tribute to fallen firefighters and EMTs Sunday in a ceremony at Station 9 on Academy Street.

Members of the volunteer fire company rang a fire bell 81 times, one ring for each of the 81 firefighters killed in the line of duty in the United States last year.

The list of fallen firefighters includes one from Delaware, 17-year-old Justin E. Townsend, of the Dagsboro Volunteer Fire Department, who was killed in a Sept. 27 car crash while on the way to a brush fire.

"Each October we gather our members at our own memorial bell to reflect on the sacrifices of those who died in the line of duty and to let their families and co-workers know they will never be forgotten," Aetna Chief John Rudd said.

Diane Silverman, a firefighter and EMT for Aetna Hose Hook and Ladder, rings a bell Sunday to honor fallen firefighters.

Aetna's bell ceremony dates back more than 30 years, according to spokesman John H. Farrell IV. The bell, bought in 1905, was originally used to summon firefighters in emergencies.

Sunday's ceremony coincided with the National Fallen Firefighters Memorial Service in Emmitsburg, Md. More than 5,000 people, including some Aetna members, attended that event, Farrell said.

Fire departments throughout the nation rang bells Sunday to honor the fallen firefighters.

Egyptian Festival dishes out authentic food and culture

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

Members of St. Mary Coptic Orthodox Church of Delaware celebrated their semiannual Egyptian Festival over the weekend, serving up authentic Middle Eastern foods and desserts while sharing ancient Egyptian culture with visitors.

Guests like sisters Sonya Patronik, of Wilmington, and Jean Roeth, of Newark, toured the church on Otts Chapel Road while they sampled desserts such as Baklava – layers of buttered filo stuffed with walnuts, sugar and cinnamon dressed with sugar syrup – and Kahk, Egyptian-style cookies covered with powdered sugar.

Church member Nader Makarios led visitors through the tour as he explained the coptic art and the stories behind each of the religious icons that hung on the walls. The word “coptic,” he said, means Egyptian Christians and also describes the faith’s art and architecture.

Paintings of St. Mary, who Makarios said always sits with Christ on her lap to her left, were hung throughout the church. He said all coptic art shows figures facing forward and with both eyes looking at the viewer unless it is a depiction of either Satan, a dragon or an evil king, in which case only one eye is shown. Makarios also explained an icon of Saint Mena, a fourth-century coptic martyr and one of the most well-known Egyptian saints.

“Just by looking at the icons you can tell there’s something behind them,” he said. “We have the heritage, the language, the music and the culture of our ancestors.”

Patronik and Roeth said they enjoyed hearing the stories behind the icons and learning the names of the saints and martyrs.

“We loved learning about the culture, and the people here are so nice,” Roeth said.

Handmade jewelry crafted by church member Mona Eskandar was on display for purchase, as were sweaters and scarves knitted by Samia Mansour and various Egyptian souvenirs and artifacts. All proceeds went to the St. Mary Coptic Orthodox Church.

There was also a photo booth at which visitors stood in front of a green screen dressed in Egyptian costumes provided by the church. They were able to choose between images of pyramids for the picture’s background.

Festival-goers enjoyed authentic, homemade Middle Eastern foods cooked by church members such as Kofta – a meatball-like hamburger – falafel, lamb, beef and chicken kabobs and a pasta dish made with layered penne, beef and Béchamel sauce, a thick cream sauce.

Patronik and Roeth said the food is the reason they came to the event, and the same reason they have come in the past.

“Everything is homemade, it’s just so good,” Patronik said.

the festival has been popular since it began in 2010. The church usually holds one in May and one in October, however he is considering canceling the May festival in order to focus efforts for the fall.

When Patronik and Roeth heard the spring festival might not happen next year, they joked that they had to go back to the table and get more food.

“We should just take a bunch and freeze it for the year it’s so good,” Roeth said.

executive director, unveiled the organization’s new logo Saturday night, which was changed to signify that art is a continuous transformation.

He said he is most proud of the group’s outreach over the last 20 years to bring art to children in the community through art classes and programs like Camp Imagine. He said the NAA has worked hard to run the two-week visual and performance art camp for the last 15 years and make it affordable for families of different socioeconomic status.

To Lawson, art is important because it allows people to express themselves and recognize who they are, something he said has a huge impact on children.

“Art helps them throughout their lives to be creative thinkers,” he said. “And that’s especially important for their future in the job market.”

When people think of the NAA, Lawson said, they tend to think visual arts and although that is the organization’s focus, it plans to “I’d like to see us explore those three aspects,” Lawson said.

For the years to come, Foreman hopes for more of the same: more members and fundraising so they can expand and reach more people. She doesn’t know what the NAA’s next idea will be or when it will come. As of now, she said anything could happen.

“With a grassroots organization like us, there’s not a lot of red tape,” Foreman said. “Someone’s probably brewing up an idea somewhere.”

Flag football coach's commitment to team goes above and beyond

By JON BUZBY

Newark Post columnist

Jonathan Fitch sent an email to Colts parents in late August introducing himself as their child's flag football coach. He talked about practice times and locations, a snack schedule and how weather cancellations would be handled. He then mentioned he might miss the first practice.

What? Great start, right? New season. New coach. And he's already going to miss a practice.

But then Fitch went on to explain in the email that he and his wife, Hannah, were expecting their fourth child any day.

My guess is there aren't many men who would step up and volunteer to coach knowing that his newborn was coming into the world during the season. And probably even fewer women who would let a to-be father do it.

But faith and sports have always been important to the Christiana High graduate, and so it was only natural that when the Upward Sports football season at Bible Fellowship Church on Old Baltimore Pike rolled around and the league needed a coach, it didn't matter what else was going on in his life. Fitch was eager to be on the sideline for a fifth-consecutive season.

"My wife was fine with it," Fitch insisted.

And Hannah confirmed her husband's claim.

"He works hard every day so that I can stay home to raise and homeschool our children, so I feel it's very important for him to be involved in other things that he enjoys doing," said Hannah, who leads the Awana Cubbies, a church group for young girls. "Sports has always been his passion, and coaching has been something he's always wanted to do."

With four daughters now ranging in age from one month to 6 years, one would assume that when Fitch makes the short drive from his Robscott Manor home to a practice or game, he's got at least one player in the car with him. But none of Fitch's daughters play in the coed league, which makes his efforts as a volunteer even more noble.

"Jonathan has put the interest of the community and this church above himself," sports director Steve Morton said.

"We need people like Jonathan to be coaches because he cares about the kids and the families involved. The community has received the Upward Sports program well, and it's because of coaches like Jonathan Fitch."

Fitch has wanted to coach kids as long as he can remember.

"I have always enjoyed sports and always wanted to get involved with coaching," said Fitch, who spent six years in the Navy before graduating from the University of Delaware.

His two oldest daughters cheer for Upward, and the 6-year-old also plays on Fitch's soccer team.

"I don't think there's any big difference," Fitch said about coaching his own daughter. "If anything, it's making sure that I don't look like I'm putting my kid in too much."

Fitch is deeply involved in the church and the fact that Upward Sports is about more than just the game is another reason he comes back season after season.

"I like what Upward stands for — everyone plays and using sports to preach the gospel," he said.

Fitch doesn't preach during games, but he does stress sportsmanship on every play.

"Every time they grab a flag from the opposite team, they make sure that they give it back to the person with a smile," said Joy Perry, whose son plays on the team. "They have a winning attitude with a humble spirit that exemplifies that of our coach."

"Even though he doesn't have any biological sons, he has adopted 12 young boys who proudly call themselves Colts," she added.

When asked about trying for a fifth child so that maybe he'd have a football player to coach one day, Fitch grinned ear to ear. "No, we're done."

Leaders encouraged to join Principal for a Day program

By ZAC CROCE

Special to the Post

Gov. Jack Markell visited Newark High School last week to welcome back the annual Principal for a Day program.

The program, which began in 1993, is sponsored by the Delaware State Chamber of Commerce along with several other partners and provides Delaware business leaders the opportunity to engage with students by handling the daily responsibilities of the school principal, such as getting students on the bus, greeting them in the morning and even taking part in school budget discussions.

For the first time in the program's existence, registration has moved to an online portal, and according to DSCC President Joan Verplanck, is intended to engage participants on a new level. Verplanck explained that the online registration as an opportunity to get the word out about the program, in contrast to the previous system of registration, which she described as cumbersome and quiet.

"This way we are creating an online community and encouraging both principals and business people to use technology to take pictures, post them," Verplanck said. "I think once people see other people doing it, it becomes more real for them."

Furthermore, the new registration page allows business leaders to choose the school they would like to be placed in.

Principal for a Day is open to public, private, and charter schools with over 100 already signed up, which Markell — a Newark High alumnus — sees as an opportunity to showcase the progress being made in the state's education system.

"I guarantee to whoever participates, it will be a great experience to see what goes on in our schools," Markell said.

flooding throughout Newark, the city's water department investigated the current storm sewer system in areas of East Main Street, Haines Street, Kells Avenue, Arbour Drive, Swarthmore Road, Devon Place, Barksdale Road, Julie Lane, Leroy Hill Field, Paper Mill Road and Timberline Drive. Officials presented their findings to council last week, and Vitola recommended charging residents a monthly fee to help foot the nearly $7 million bill.

He held true to that recommendation Monday night and continued to suggest a $7.50 monthly fee for residents and a $30 monthly fee for businesses billed through their existing utility bill for a total annual revenue of $1,532,070, in lieu of an equivalent tax increase of 27.8 percent Vitola did not think was a fair option.

In the next two years, the city's water department plans to relocate utility pipe crossings where possible and install access points at the crossings to enable maintenance for removal of debris, determine system capacity, address capacity problems and replace deteriorating pipes. The storm sewer fee will help cover these cost of addressing current flooding issues and prevent future problems, Vitola said.

Vitola and Houck also presented some "out-of-the-box" ideas to council on Monday such as charging Newark hotels a "hotel occupancy tax" due to their strategic placement near I-95 and the University of Delaware, which fosters hotel stay with events like alumni weekend and homecoming. Houck also suggested slapping the university with an "amusement tax" for those events that draw large crowds.
