AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL

President: Sheen Whitmore Vice-President: Paul Lammorale Secretary: Alison Deckhut Treasurer: Sheelagh Clark

The purpose of the Agriculture College Council is to unite the various clubs of agriculture and the college as a whole. Some events that they sponsored this year were: a freshman picnic, the Aggie (Semiformal) Spring Barnraising (special thanks to Alpha Zeta), and Ag Day. The group also participated in the planning of commencement ceremonies. Special awards for student participation in the Agriculture College were awarded on Honors Day by the Agriculture College Council. The Council was also an active member of the Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress (DUSC).

"We hope that future Aggies will work as diligently in the promotion of Agriculture and the College as we have strived to do in the past year."

Alpha Zeta is a national, professional, co-ed agricultural service fraternity. The brothers and sisters are all in the top two-fifths of their classes and demonstrate qualities of leadership, scholarship, and character. AZ participates in Newark Community Day, conducts farm tours for local elementary schools in October, and hosts annual Beef and Chicken Barbecues for the college, community, and alumni. AZ members also participate in the annual Ag Day sponsored by the Agriculture College. The brothers and sisters are also involved in numerous service projects to benefit the community.

The American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronauties was initiated to organize members of the aerospace society into a cohesive network, enabling state-of-theart developments to reach all locations of this highly progressive field. The student chapter at the University of Delaware encourages engineering majors interested in the aerospace industry to discover more about this dynamic area than what can be found in their required courses. Field trips this year included visits to the National Air and Space Museum, Aberdeen Proving Ground, and an actual flight experience at a local airport. Members also attended a regional conference at the University of Virginia where designs from the Mechanical and Aerospace Department were submitted in competition along with those from other universities.

The American Society of Civil Engineers (ASCE) student chapter, in its 50th year of the U of D, is a group of 51 civil engineers who recognize the need to develop their professional careers outside of academic learning. ASCE provides many opportunities to do this through meetings featuring professional civil engineering speakers, field trips to civil engineering projects and job sites, and an annual community project.

This year ASCE sponsored a successful sport shirt sale, held field trips to the top of the Delaware Memorial Bridge, and to the College of Marine Studies in Lewes, they attended a luncheon sponsored by the Air Force, awarded a chaptersponsored scholarship to an ASCE member, and aided in constructing playground equipment for the Newark Department of Parks.

The American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME) is a professional organization in which students receive a chance to associate with professional engineers. The parent chapter of ASME holds monthly dinner meetings for both senior professional and student members. This student section enables students to obtain exposure to industry through seminars and plant trips.

Every Spring ASME holds a picnic at Lum's Pond State Park near campus. A faculty versus student softball game is the highlight of the afternoon.

ASME has created close ties among engineering students and faculty members in both professional and social matters and is proud of its accomplishments.

The Arts and Science College Council is the students' voice within the College of Arts and Science. The Council is made up of one representative from each of the academic departments within the College. They represent the students of the College through the programs they sponsor. A College Fair is run each semester to inform students about up-coming course offerings, departmental majors and minors, special programs, and alternate degrees. They print a newsletter each semester which informs students about the council, news from within the college, and where to send their complaints.

They also run a career day in the Spring for students preparing to graduate and looking for a job. They organize a dance solely for students of the college as well.

Overall, the Council feels that they "can only be successful with student support."

The Big Brothers/Big Sisters Club is a new organization on campus, having been founded just this year. The organization is made up of University students who expressed an interest in the program, students who are waiting to be matched to a child, and students who are already matched to a little brother or sister.

The main focus of the group is in the areas of public relations, recruitment, fundraising, and activities with single parent children who are waiting to be matched with a big brother or a big sister. The students in the group have held a film festival and a variety show, taken the children to programs at the Newark Senior Citizen's Center, and sponsored a picnic for matched and unmatched children at Lum's Pond State Park.

There has been much enthusiasm for the new club on campus, and it is hoped that this enthusiasm will grow in the future.

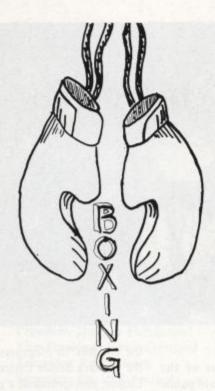

The Black Student Union is the official voice of the Black student on campus, advocating in educational, social, and political matters. Under its wings are the Black Leadership Council which coordinates the efforts of all Black organizations,

The Boxing Club is a member of the National Collegiate Boxing Association. Some of their members compete in tournaments against other schools, but most of them just work out for the physical conditioning aspects of boxing. They compete in the Eastern Collegiate Boxing Association against such schools as West Chester State College, Virginia Military Institute, Penn, Villanova, and the Naval Academy.

This year was their most successful ever. They competed in six tournaments and won two of them. They hoped throughout the year to have a few Eastern Regional champions who will then get bids to compete for National honors. They remain enthusiastic about the continued growth of collegiate boxing both here at Delaware and throughout the country. Their favorite saying is "the more sweat in training, the less blood in combat."

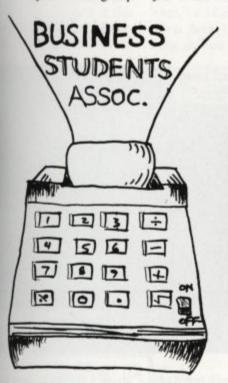

The Business and Economics College Council provides the forum for students to channel their feelings and ideas to the Dean and faculty. The diversified group enjoys many activities, but foremost in the group's thinking is the importance of student input into the group.

Active in sports, they hold a tennis tournament with faculty and play basketball frequently with department members. The organization has sponsored such programs as "How to read the Wall Street Journal" and "What can you do with your major?" Fun events include a bush trip to the Big Apple to visit the New York Stock Exchange, a Christmas Party, and the Annual Business and Economics College Council Dinner Dance. All in all, the College Council does much to enhance the College of Business and Economics.

One such successful presentation this year was a lecture and sampling by Miller Brewing Company. Their annual social activities include the Spring Semi-formal, and the Business College dinner in the Fall with

By definition, a liberterian is one who "believes in freedom of action and thought." Here at the University of Delaware the Campus Libertarians adhere to this definition by striving to protect and advance the freedom of all individuals. The group believes that each individual should be free to do as they wish as long as there is no infringement upon the rights and freedoms of others.

The group looks to the Statue of Liberty on Staten Island as the symbol of this freedom for which they strive. Looking back in history, Thomas Jefferson is suggested by the group as the most famous libertarian. Foremost of the groups goals is to offer the freedom of choice provided by third party candidates in local, state and national elections.

The Circle K Club here at Delaware is a coed service club sponsored by the Red Clay Valley Kiwanis Club. Every year they do a variety of service projects in the greater Newark area. Some of the major projects of this year were sponsoring a Roaring 20's party at the Newark

Their biggest project each year is the "Circle K Challenge," a 5Km. race that involves both University students as well as community

The Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress (DUSC) is a liaison between students and the Administration. The structure of DUSC allows them to call themselves a student government. They represent student interests through the general election of DUSC officers, the elections of committee chairpersons by students involved in the committees, and through overseeing the elections of organization officers by students involved in major-student interest groups listed in the Undergraduate Student Congress Constitution.

The purpose of a liaison is to solve the problems which occur, or at least to try to solve them. DUSC does just that! Using the proper channels of administration, they try to solve problems that students bring to their attention. The key phrase is "bring it to their attention;" for without this additional involvement, DUSC members cannot do their job effectively. Many improvements have been made this year by reaching out to students and letting them know that DUSC can help them while they help DUSC. It is DUSC's hope that next year's and the following year's student organizations will profit from these improvements.

REVIEW RE

A totally student-run newspaper, The Review is the only local publication in Newark and strives to keep both the student body and the surrounding community informed about campus, local and state-wide issues.

As an independently-financed newspaper, The Review operates on an annual budget of nearly $100,000. Through the combined efforts of 135 students, the paper is published every Tuesday and Friday during Fall and Spring Semesters, and weekly during Winter Session.

Along with re-locating its offices to the second floor of the Student Center this year, The Review's banner was redesigned to reflect their contemporary approach to journalism.

Problems and topics of special interest to both students and Delawarians resulted in the publication of four special news pull-out sections this year. The topics covered included the University's 150th Anniversary, environmental problems in Delaware and nationwide, women in 1982, and racism in Delaware.

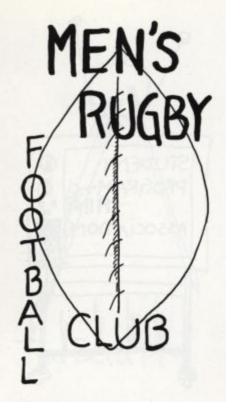

The Men's Rugby Football Club consists of approximately forty athletes competing in ten-game seasons in both the Fall and the Spring. The "A" team completed the 1982 Fall season with an impressive tally of nine wins and a single loss. It also took third place in the 1982 University Championship Tournament held at Lehigh University. The club recaptured the "Richard Hedd Memorial Award" from archrival Wilmington Rugby Club for the first time in two years.

The "B" team completed the season with an equally impressive cumulative record of eight wins and one loss. Both teams continued to maintain their winning ways into the Spring season, which was highlighted by their participation in an international rugby contest in Bermuda during Spring Break.

SPA also presents the less popular, but more educational, foreign films on Sunday evenings.

Aside from the films, SPA also presents local favorites in concert such as the Ventures and Jorma Kaukonen. The Woman's Soccer Club is a first year organization here at Delaware. The common objective of all club members is "to play soccer and have a good time." Many club members played high school soccer, but there are players at all skill levels and a "desire to play" is all that is required of members.

The club showed much improvement as the year went on and membership grew quickly. The overall success of its first year has the Women's Soccer Club looking forward to a promising season next year.

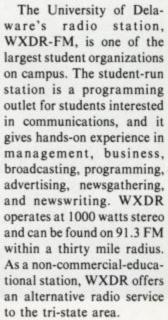

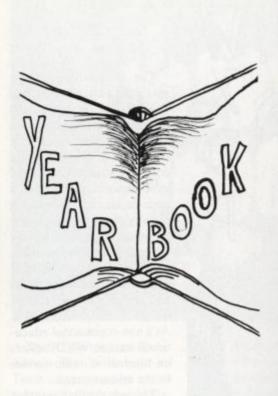

This was the first year that WXDR was in stereo, and its new office and studio in the Student Center offers the station three times more space. This was also the first year that they had a professional station manager who also teaches a course at the University.

The Blue Hen Yearbook is given the responsibility for capturing and recording the life, activities, and events on and around campus. In short, the yearbook staff must gather the "statements of college life."

The staff includes both writers and photographers from all colleges of the University. Throughout the year, the staff members cover the major happenings at the University of Delaware.

This year's book is one of the largest yearbooks ever published at Delware and represents the first time in many years that dormitories have been included.

In conjunction with publishing the yearbook, The Blue Hen brings a professional photographer to campus to photograph clubs and Greeks. Senior portraits are also coordinated through the yearbook office.

Additionally, The Blue Hen and the RSA co-sponsored a raffle for a Bahamas vacation in the Spring. All proceeds of this raffle were donated to the American Cancer Society.

The Blue Hen Yearbook is currently one of the largest student organizations on campus, and is noted as one of the fastest growing yearbooks in the country.

The Student Organization Activity Center, rooms 301 and 304 of the Student Center, centralizes the resources and services available to registered student organizations and offers a wide range of services, such as typing, duplicating advisement and storage. Desks and work tables are available, as are mailboxes that may be assigned to any registered student organization. The SOAC is open from 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday to Friday, to assist organizations with any clerical questions or needs.

Adjacent to the Center, in room 306, is the Office of the Associate Director for Student Life. There members of registered student organizations can receive advice on financial management, the policies and procedures to follow, how to become an effective group leader, the development of leadership qualities in organizational management, and other areas related to the needs of their organizations.

The primary purpose of SOAC staff members is to offer direction and to encourage the development of programs and activities presented by registered student organizations. This purpose is based on the philosophy that active student participation in the planning and presentation of student activities and programs contributes to the total educational development of students. To support this belief and purpose, the SOAC staff conducts management workshops for student leaders and organizations as a follow-up to the SCOPE (Student Clubs and Organization Program Effectiveness) workshop for student leaders in the fall. Students are encouraged to become involved in student organizations and, through them, to utilize the resources and services of the Student Organization Activity Center.

You can find information about an established club or organization at the SOAC. If you and a group of friends would like to start a new student organization, SOAC staff members will explain the procedures and assist you with them.
