State Democrats, Nixon Sweep Election

McGovern Concedes,

Nixon Accepts

Tribbitt, Biden Celebrate

Senator George McGovern, conceding the presidential race to Richard Nixon at 11:35 on a nationally televised broadcast, told a cheering audience that he hopes the President "will lead us to peace abroad." The Senator praised "all those who have worked so hard all these months," and added that the past two years of campaigning had brought "great joys" that "are not going to be washed away in the tears of one night." He said that there can be "no question" that his campaign has directed America toward peace.

"We will press on with that effort till all bloodshed, and sorrow have ended once and for all. We do love this country. We will continue to beckon it to a higher standard." McGovern then concluded with a quote from Isaiah.

Nixon delivered his acceptance speech from his oval office in Washington about midnight. He said that this election "will be a victory for America, only if, in these next four years, we, all of us, can work together to achieve our common great goals of peace at home and peace for all nations in the world, and for that new progress and prosperity which all Americans deserve." Nixon said he hoped that over the next four years "we can so conduct ourselves in this country and so meet our responsibilities in the world, in building peace in the world that years from now, people will look back to the generation of the 1970's... and they will say 'God Bless America.'"

Agnew, speaking moments later, said, "this has to be a tremendously satisfying evening for all those of you who have worked so hard to re-elect our great president... it's wonderful to have a winner in politics."

The Hotel DuPont was jammed beyond capacity last night, and an atmosphere of hysteria prevailed as victorious Democrats Joe Biden and Sherman Tribbitt delivered statements to a multitude of friends and campaign workers.

Tribbitt, who won the gubernatorial race by over 7,000 votes, was mobbed by cheering campaign workers who repeatedly hugged him as he arrived in the hotel's DuBarry Room shortly after midnight. "I'm overenthused beyond all imagination," Tribbitt said. "It's very hard to hold my composure." He firmly denied that his election was an upset. "I've said repeatedly many times that I was going to be elected governor," Tribbitt asserted, concluding that "it's a fun night tonight."

Russell Peterson conceded the election at his Wilmington headquarters on 12th St., thanking everyone for his help and stating that he would still continue to work for a better community. Peterson, who took his loss in a relaxed and graceful manner, was reported to be planning visits to downstate Republican headquarters after midnight to thank his campaign workers.

Peterson's 12th St. headquarters was packed for most of the night but was practically empty by 12:30 a.m. The Republican headquarters at the Hotel DuPont, housed in a basement cafeteria, was also deserted.

Biden entered the hotel's gold ballroom at 11:50 p.m. to deliver a statement to the waiting crowd, which was about five times beyond the room's 375 legal capacity. Biden talked for about ten minutes, saying, "we have rewritten politics in the state of Delaware. If ever there were a winner in Delaware as a consequence of volunteers, then I am the one."

"We beat a hell of a nice guy and I mean it," Biden told the crowd. "We've shown people what running a campaign is all about."

Stepping out of a taxi in front of the hotel at 11:30 p.m., Republican Harry Haskell remarked, "We're sorry we lost but now is the time to pull together behind the man who won." A triumphant Thomas Maloney said, "I feel happy, it was a good victory and we worked hard. It was won with our volunteers."

At Pete duPont's headquarters on Delaware Ave., a campaign worker announced Norma Handloff's concession at 9:45 p.m. to a gathering of some 75 supporters of the Republican candidate. duPont arrived at the store front at about 11:15 p.m., stood on a table standing against one side of the room, and spoke for about two minutes to a predominantly middle-aged group. "Two more years and we'll try it again," duPont said at the end of his speech.

Democrat Mel Slawik, who was successful in his bid for New Castle County executive, felt at 10 p.m. that "it will be a miracle if I win." Speaking at city hall, Slawik said "I feel like a guy who's going to get hung tomorrow morning at 8 a.m. There's nothing like the feeling of having your name on the ballot, knowing that people are voting for or against you. It's hard to explain."

Here's How They Felt At The Polls

Staff photos by Burleigh Cooper

Interviews by David Hoffman

One elderly, black woman expressed her hopes that the new president would "...help my husband, get him either his social security or his old age pension. . . He's been trying for two years and a half and hasn't gotten it yet. . . 'The presidents got so much to do for us all.'"

Concerning national priorities, for the future, this professor cited as most important "the war, the economy and coming to grips with this problem between the races. . ."

He thinks the student vote will go largely for Sen. McGovern.

As an attorney, "I think we've got to get the country back where it belongs. . . the things that are going on in Washington are very frightening."

He feels, the government has now "a lack of responsibility for the people, and caters instead to the special interests."

A principal at the Newark Middle school commented that "The 18-year-old voters will probably vote pretty much the way their parents do. . . I think the next president should concentrate on changing from somewhat of a war economy to a peace economy." The administrator was "not swayed" by the peace rumors—"I voted the way I had planned to vote."

A Delaware student said he felt that "The next president, as his first priority, should take us out of Vietnam. I don't think that has happened as yet, but the news of peace has convinced me that the President has been playing with the war for his re-election."

This businessman, a printer, believes that the news of peace is "Just like making a bet, I guess. You are never sure that you've won until you get your money in your hand. . . until then it is just a matter of waiting."

He said that he "hadn't given much of a thought" to national priorities.

Although this realtor claimed that he was not swayed by the recent news of peace, he added that "I've been satisfied with the present way it (the war) has been run."

"I'm happy students are voting, but I don't know which way they are going to vote. . ."

Retired, "but still working some," this man commented that he "would rather have not voted for either of the presidential candidates." He thinks that students should have "voted a long time ago... the 18-year-old vote will make the election more democratic."

His single, unexplained, national priority is "morality."
