One way to ensure economic security in Delaware is to focus on creating “high-opportunity” neighborhoods throughout the entire state. A large key to achieving this is through the minimization and prevention of racial and economic isolation. How can we change policies as a state to close racial and economic gaps and provide greater opportunities to our lower income families and kids?

The foundation of our economy rests on the health and stability of our public systems and structures. Economic activity depends on transportation systems, energy, and communications grids. It is supported by the courts, our postal system, and educational institutions. When investment is lacking and unemployment increases, children often face the direct effects.

Reducing poverty, and the racial and ethnic disparities in our state's poverty rates, must begin with a shared understanding of how opportunities and well-being are shaped by policy. EITC, SNAP, and TANF are examples of policy actions that support child well-being by strengthening families.

Children of color are 2.6 times more likely to experience poverty than their white peers. Through TANF, the EITC, SNAP, and other federal assistance programs we have begun to lower that number. But we have not fixed it. No child should face a future limited by inequity. Together, state lawmakers and advocates can design laws, practices, and policies to extend opportunities to all.

Once baby's teeth have begun to come in, it is important to keep in mind that even breastfeeding babies are sometimes susceptible to baby-bottle tooth decay (BBTD), a major cause of dental cavities in infants that can also cause serious damage to permanent teeth later on. BBTD results from teeth being coated in almost any liquid other than water for long periods, and occurs most commonly among babies who are put to bed with a bottle of formula or juice.

When schools serve nutritious foods and invest time in physical education, they become learning environments that shape strong minds and bodies; initiatives such as community gardens can make healthy food available to everyone; neighborhood amenities such as parks, recreation center, sidewalks and libraries make it safer for children to engage in physical activity and serve as a vehicle for socializing, increased time outdoors, and enhanced quality of life.

Policy Win

Families were having trouble tracking the number of doses of medicine left in quick-relief bronchodilators—the inhalers that patients with asthma rely on to open airway passages during a flare-up. Each inhaler has approximately 200 doses of medicine. Some inhalers have dose counters that track how many doses of active medication are left in the inhaler; however, the brand previously covered by Delaware Medicaid did not. The Medicaid and Medical Assistance Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee recommended a policy change that has since been implemented. All Medicaid beneficiaries, both children and adults diagnosed with asthma and other respiratory conditions now have access to a bronchodilator inhaler with a dose counter.

In Delaware, adolescents make up 19% of the population. Commonly considered a time marked by risky behaviors, it is also a time of immense opportunity because it is a critical period to create life-long patterns of behavior. Delaware provides a healthy diet to 36 percent of public school students through the federal National School Lunch and School Breakfast programs. In the 2015-2016 school year, Delaware was the third state in a nation for overall adoption of the Community Eligibility Provision, which provides universal meal service to students in school districts with at least 40% of students who are directly certified for free meals. Programs like this—that support child development by ensuring all children are well nourished—are a critical component in raising healthy, strong, and smart children.

Note: Direct Certification – Students who receive benefits from the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) and/or Delaware’s Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) automatically qualify for free meals with no further documentation necessary. Other students can qualify based on completion of the meal eligibility form. In CEP schools, the basis for reimbursement is Direct Certification x 1.6, but all students receive free meals.

Since most children attend schools they live near, patterns of residential segregation and poverty concentration are reflected in the racial, ethnic, and economic makeup of schools and districts. Decades of policy choices and individual behavior have led to the concentration of children of color and low-income families in certain schools and districts. Students in high-poverty schools are more likely to face out-of-school challenges—including housing instability, food insecurity, and lack of access to health care—which research shows is connected to academic readiness, test performance, and educational achievement.

Education Policy
Spotlight:

To strengthen public education funding, Delaware might consider revamping the revenue base supporting public education at both state and local levels, including property reassessment and adjustments in the allocation system to fully address the needs of low-income students, English language learners, and other students at risk.

Education Policy Spotlight:

FACT SHEET #1

ELs are the fastest growing student population. They are enrolled in every district and charter in the state.

Delaware is one of only four states that does not provide additional education funding for English learners, meaning districts and charters must cobble together other funding to meet legal requirements for serving this group of students. Dedicated funds for EL students could help districts and charters provide a wide array of services, including hiring additional certified instructors. Check out <http://bit.ly/ELsInDE> for more information on our EL students.

Education Policy Spotlight:

In Delaware, nearly 9,000 students are enrolled in a statewide initiative called Delaware Pathways, which is designed to provide college and career preparation for youth. The program allows high school students to develop needed skills, get real work experience, earn college credit, and gain industry-recognized credentials that prepare them for postsecondary education or employment when they graduate. At the same time, participating businesses are developing a strong local workforce of the future by helping students gain the knowledge and skills needed to be job-ready upon graduation.

Delaware should be a place where a child's beginnings, however humble, do not limit life's path. Poverty is the single greatest threat to a child's well-being.

Economic Policy Spotlight:

The Federal Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) is one of the nation's most effective anti-poverty programs for working families. Delaware could enrich it's state level EITC policy by offering a refundable credit. Federal and state EITC policies serve many public policy goals including reducing child poverty, increasing the incentive to work, stabilizing income, and spurring consumption.

The WONDER program, funded through a USDA Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program Employment & Training pilot program, is designed to promote long-term self-sufficiency and independence by preparing SNAP recipients for employment through work-related education and training activities. The Delaware WONDER program enrolls SNAP recipients into one of four career tracks: construction, manufacturing, culinary arts, or broad-based job skills.

KIDS COUNT in Delaware wants to see our state provide meaningful and abundant opportunities for every child. For that vision to be realized, children's risks and opportunities in life should not be dictated by their gender, ZIP code, family income, race, or ethnicity.

Family/Community
Policy Spotlight:

Policies that encourage families to build assets can support child well-being. In 2017, two bills were passed focused on family asset building. HB 31 authorizes the use of “prize-linked” savings accounts to promote savings among low-income residents and first-time savers and HB 11 removes the prohibition against receipt of TANF funds to people convicted of drug felonies as long as the person is otherwise eligible for TANE.

To protect children, we need to improve the environmental health systems in communities throughout Delaware, giving everyone the opportunity to live free from environmental threats. An interesting example of work in this area is the Delaware Cancer Consortium's partnership with state agencies, such as DNREC's Division of Air Quality. The purpose of this initiative is to learn more about the possible health risks of ambient exposure to toxins, promote the exchange of useful information to Delawareans, understand where risks can be avoided, and provide information from which proactive decisions and good policies can be developed. Learn more at www.healthydelaware.org/Consortium/About

Delaware children are in an increasingly diverse cohort and targeting policy to varied needs simultaneously is a challenge. However, the payoffs—both economically and morally—are well worth the work.
